

BITE THE HAND THAT FEEDS THE POISONED

DIY, HARDCOREPUNK
T-THRASH-ANARCHO

POLITICAL / PERSONAL WRITINGS
ZINE / RECORD REVIEWS

ISSUE
#3

The idea for this issue of the zine started when LIL & I decided to do a split issue 'cos we were both into each others' zines and had been friends for quite a while. We discussed doing something to separate it from the usual split-zine fare, e.g. two half-zines that have nothing to do with each other. We discussed different themes to write on,

I chose a few, and decided to try to lay it out in such a way that we would each lay out half of the other person's stuff & half of our own, each do a cover, put it all together (this we do tomorrow when I'm back in Ireland) and also do a split poster to go with it.

Hopefully the finished zine will meet our expectations, and regardless, I'm still totally excited and honoured to do this split with Eric. He's a perfect example of a rare kind of person, the kind of people who keep me interested in and passionate about punk & this whole environment. Kind, friendly, dedicated, not interested in shit-talking, political, uncompromising

& PUNK AS FUCK!! I first met Eric 6 or 7 years ago at an Oi

Pollo gig I was trying to sell copies of the zine I did at the time to people and remember getting a lot of shit off the "punk" punx because I was wearing a Bad Religion shirt. So I asked Eric, pole-spikes & grubby smelly clothes, if he wanted a copy, so we traded, for a now-ancient issue of Cotton Fist (a very different zine back then!).

I've forgotten what was in the zine, but what I remember is how he was friendly and kind to the kids from the fucking bogs everyone else was too cool for. Since getting to know him well & becoming good friends with him over the last 4 years, my opinion of him has only improved.

The issues that this zine deals with, sexual assault & rape, have been extremely difficult to write about. Whereas with other pieces in other zines I've written there's usually a definite ending or conclusion, with this there is not. A lot of the pieces I've written seem incomplete or confused - because they are.

I think that if you read the various pieces written here, you'll have a fairly clear view of my opinions on all this and how I feel in approaching these issues, but that's not the point. There are no answers here. The aim, personally, is to push these questions & concerns into our everyday thought-processes & personal relations, and in doing so distribute the crippling weight of these issues amongst a greater constituency. This fucking weight beneath which so many drown as these horrific acts are met with a deafening silence. I think it's quite interesting how the pieces I wrote, the pieces Eric wrote, and the interview all compare and contrast with one another, as they were all done without knowledge of what was said/written in the others. I feel somewhat uncomfortable with some of the things I've written; all that I ask is that instead of condemning me, communicate with me.

There's also an INEPSY interview and various reviews in here too; this zine will always be a mix of what's important to me musically as well as personally and politically. Since moving to Denmark I've come to realise just how music is the most important thing in my life and how I need to pay it more respect than I had.

previously been doing. I'm playing in 3 different bands now and have begun to realise how much respect & dedication it's necessary to pay to this part of my life, in terms of time spent practising, recording, song & lyric writing, and in terms of spending money on good equipment. That last one isn't going so smoothly... In these respects, the Japanese hardcore punk scene has been a source of immense inspiration for me - these people show true passion in how they pursue their vision of punk. If the rest of the punx worldwide dedicated such time & effort to our music, perhaps we would start to produce the equal of such phenomenal groups as have been emerging from the Far East for the last 20 years +.

The effect that being able to play music more days a week than not has had on my mental state and, in general, the balance it brings to me, is almost unbelievable. I, unfortunately, feel that it's not possible to live in such a way in Ireland - which is why I've decided not to move back there after being here for a year as I'd originally planned. The possibilities for touring, practising, putting out records, etc, and then just the basic population of people into the same things as I am, just does not exist in Ireland as it does in Europe. "Yeah so why don't you help make it that way instead of running off to another scle?" Well, there's only so much times you can bang your head off a brick wall before one of them breaks, and that's what it ended up feeling like after 6 or 7 years of putting on gigs, playing in bands, putting out records, booking tours, writing zines, doing distros, and so on (the brick wall didn't break).

As much as, and possibly more so than the music, are the people I've met here and how kind, friendly, welcoming and inclusive they've been to me. Thank you, so much, to all of you who've made an effort to get to know me, to think of & include me in the things you do, to try to speak & teach Danish to me. You've made it impossible for me to leave. Many of these people I've met through all that goes on in & around Ungdomshuset, the autonomous centre here ~~where~~ which provides a space for gigs, meetings, a cinema, bar, screen-printing, rehearsal spaces, weekly communal meals and a lot more (it's where the K-Town Festival happens each year, which many of you may be familiar with). It's under serious threat of eviction at the beginning of next year (2006), another reason for me to stay. It makes me feel so fuckin angry that in this huge city, all we ask is to have this one house, and still we are denied. Meeting & becoming friends with the people whose now (11) spoke has given them the freedom to grow into the people they are, has affected me more than any other issue or struggle in my life. If this house is lost, the heart will be torn from this city. So we hope for your support now and when the time comes (www.ungeren.dk).

Time to shut up and finish this off. Eric & I decided not to bother putting our names with each piece - get in touch if you want to know who wrote each individual piece. Thanks to all who've traded with me & helped distribute the previous issue of the zine. Thanks to Masamune Shirou, Katsuhiro Otomo, Frank Miller & Ryoichi Ikegami for the artwork I stole to use as backgrounds. Thanks to all my friends from Ireland & elsewhere who've stayed in touch & come to visit me.

Most of all, thanks to all the punx who continue to live their lives uncompromisingly in the face of this cannibal fucking society, and outline to give me the inspiration to do the same.
RADICAL PUNX NEVER DIE - UP THE FUCKIN PUNX!!

constructed to the sounds of:

STATE OF FEAR/ABANDON/INEPSY/
SEPULTURA/UNKIND/SACRILEGE/JESU/
ENTOMBED/DECREPIT/ARMAGEDDA/
NEUROSIS/WORLD BURNS TO DEATH/
ATROCIOUS MADNESS/IMMORTAL/
BASTARD/MARTYRDOÖD/NAGLFAR/
THE DAGDA/AMEBIX/WARCRY/SKITSLICKERS/HIS HERO IS GONE/
WOLFPACK/ANTI-CIMEX/NAPALM DEATH

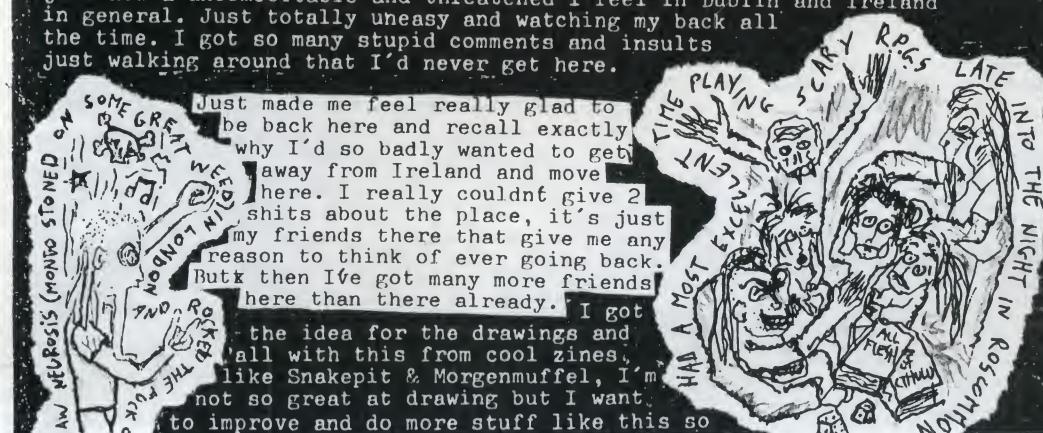

It was really cool staying there, myself and E & D have been best friends for about 10 years now and living here away from them has totally made me realise how important they are to me...we just played a load of computer games, drank & smoked a load, we just had such a good time hanging out that we weren't bothered going to the pub or anything. It was cool to see all my old friends from where I grew up too

He went to Galway with them for new years and had a mental time LSD.

I spent so much fucking time on busses aswell, not having a bike in Dublin, such a fuckin pain in the arse. Whereas all of my friends and most things going on here in Copenhagen are all within about 2km sq. of each other, everyone's totally spread out in Dublin.

3 weeks seemed way too short a time to be there, I didn't have nearly as much time as I'd have liked to hang out with people and I felt really sad when I was getting my flight back here. Then the minute I got back out on the streets here I had this overwhelming sense of relief, of being home. It was then and over the next few days that I realised just how uncomfortable and threatened I feel in Dublin and Ireland in general. Just totally uneasy and watching my back all the time. I got so many stupid comments and insults just walking around that I'd never get here.

INEPSY

SO JUST GIVE ME THE GENERAL BACKGROUND, HISTORY, MEMBERS, RELEASES?

Sam: INEPSY started in 1999 or 2000, I don't remember, with different members. Me and ~~xxxxx~~ Chan wanted to play in a band that would be ~~xx~~ the answer of all our influences...being bored as hell of crustcore, we wanted to play more in the vein of oldschool punk-hardcore bands like G.B.H., VARUKERS, DISCHARGE...and some oldschool crust and speed metal bands like SACRILEGE, HELLBASTARD, KREATOR, DESTRUCTION. But we like a lot of post-punk ~~xxxxx~~ and rocknroll bands like ~~xx~~ RADIO BIRDMAN so we tried to mix all this stuff together and it made INEPSY. We lost band members to drugs till we found a solid line-up with JP on bass and Steve Bennett on second guitar.

WHAT ABOUT SPACES FOR PUNK? IS THERE A LOT GOING ON FOR PUNKS TO BE INVOLVED IN, PLACES FOR THEM TO GO? ANY GOOD BANDS, LABELS, ZINES FROM AROUND THERE? IS THERE MUCH GOING ON IN THE WAY OF AUTONOMOUS SPACES? SQUATS, FOOD NOT BOMBS, RADICAL BOOKSTORES ETC? WHAT'S A GOOD PLACE FOR A PUNK TO GO IN MONTREAL IF THEY'RE NEW TO THE CITY AND DON'T KNOW SHIT?

Steve: About punk spaces, we live in a big warehouse called the LOUHOUSE that we do shows in, we've been living here for 5 years, I've booked a lot of shows here, but right now we're taking a break 'cos I had problems with the city and the cops, but I will start doing shows in the fall. For squats there is no such thing as squats here in Montreal, they tried 2 years ago and it lasted about a month. So we can't squat. But we have Welfare cheques so that pays our rent.

Radical bookstores, we have an anarchist book store called Librairie Alternative located downtown on St. Laurents street. As for bands, there's some good bands to check out - C.C.S.S. (members of INEPSY), AFTER THE BOMBS (ex-HELLBOUND).

BALLAST, BORN DEAD ICONS, ~~xxxxx~~ COMPLICATION (members of BDI), WALK ASIDE, THE UNCIVILISED, THE RUFFIANS, MANIC MANON AND THE GUEST LIST and a lot more.

WHAT'S IT LIKE LIVING IN MONTREAL. DO YOU GET SHIT FROM PEOPLE ON THE STREETS FOR LOOKING PUNK OR DO YOU FEEL THREATENED? IS THERE A LOT OF VIOLENCE? IS IT THE KIND OF PLACE THAT PUNKS MOVE TO OR THAT THEY TRY TO GET AWAY FROM?

Steve: Living in Montreal is like paradise, for punks. Walking on the street with charged hair, people don't give a fuck or they get ~~xxxxx~~ frightened. Montreal is really not violent, the only violence we see is the violence we do. But we are not that violent but we like to fuck shit up sometimes! Most of the punks in Montreal are from all over the country even some from the USA, everyone that comes to ~~xxxxx~~ Montreal wants to move here, why? Because its punk paradise, big punk scene.

So when you started the band did you intend for it to sound like it does or did it just happen? I've just heard one track off the new CITY/WEAPONS LP, is the progression in your style a by-product of improving ~~xxx~~ at your instruments or did you always strive to sound like this? Any idea of what we should expect from new material after this LP? ~~xxxxx~~

Sam: When we first started we wanted to sound exactly how we do... ~~xxxxx~~ We've seen an evolution since the first 7" SEE YOU IN HELL by the quality of the recording sound...the first stuff is more raw but the composition is similar to ROCKNROLL BABYLON and most of the songs on CITY/WEAPONS. I think that we've squashed all the juice out of this (d-beat & rocknroll) style on these 3 releases...we haven't composed any new songs up to now but if we do, we want to go more in a punk rock direction like the song BREAK THE CHAINS on CITY/WEAPONS and spend more time to work on good & catchy backing vocals.

HOW LONG HAVE YOU EACH BEEN INVOLVED WITH PUNK? HOW DID YOU GET INTO PUNK IN THE FIRST PLACE? WHAT MOTIVATES YOU TO STAY INVOLVED ~~xxxxx~~ & INSPIRED?

Steve: I've been involved in punk for maybe 17 years now, and why? I don't even know myself, hahah...for real cos we like it, we like ~~xxxxx~~ the way of life of punk I guess, we don't know anything else.

I thought that as part of this zine it'd be good to have an interview with some women from outside of Ireland who live there & are involved in the punk scene, so as to contrast their previous experiences with what they'd experienced since moving to Ireland. Also with an Irish woman involved in the punk scene for quite a while, as a further contrast. Each of them are involved in various ways, through bands, zines, collectives, etc in the Irish punk scene. Kylie added her own answers/comments in response to the rest of the already transcribed interview, which took place in the Phibsboro Chateaux de Crust, a few days before Crustmas 2004...

So first, what's your name, where are you from, how long have you been in Ireland?

Clodagh: I'm Clodagh, I'm from Dublin. I've always lived here.

Tamarack: My name is Tamarack, I'm from western Canada. I've been here all-in-all for about two years.

Dayana: I'm Dayana, I'm from Brazil and I've been here for 1 year and 5 months.

So have you experienced much sexism in Irish society in general?

Kylie: Well patriarchy, sexism, homophobia and transphobia exist everywhere of course, but there were certainly some experiences I had, or some things I noticed, that seemed quite particular to Ireland. I mean, obviously it's a very Catholic country, and this seems to be reflected pretty strongly in repressed attitudes towards sexuality and gender. Also queer visibility and radical sexual politics was well, not very visible, it felt like a huge silence, something that was really obviously missing both in general Irish society and in the punk/anarchist/leftwing/general ratbag community (although of course I do understand some of the reasons for why that is). And the kind of sexism I noticed or experienced was the kind that is often hard to call people on, I'm talking about that Irish humour! You know, someone (probably a friend) saying something incredibly sexist but in a "humourous" manner with a smile on their face, so it makes it a lot harder to call them on their shit than if it was obviously malicious and from a stranger on the street. I was reading a cultural studies book that made the point that if you went from Australia to say, Japan or India, then you would totally be preparing yourself for cultural differences and cultural shock. But if you were going to a similar "western" country like say, Ireland or the U.S., you probably wouldn't be expecting it to be that divergent from your cultural reference points and zone of familiarity, and therefore wouldn't be prepared for the inevitable culture shock. When I moved to Dublin, the culture shock I experienced was mostly related to language and humour. I had a LOT to adjust to socially, there were a lot of times I was sitting in a room full of people feeling a bit weird, feeling a bit on the outside (and not just cos I was new to town), thinking "hey, everyone here is supposed to be friends with each other but they're all slagging each other off! They're all tearing each other to pieces cos it means they actually really love each other!" To me, it sometimes just seemed really mean and I didn't know how to relate or react to it apart from being my overly-earnest humourless self!

Dayana: It's hard to say because I don't know very many people outside of the punk scene here, but I think everywhere has sexism, every single country. I dunno, people in general act towards me in a really sexual way and don't respect women. Like, in Brazil all the propaganda on TV is totally sexist, and the punk scene is the same as everywhere, has much more men than women, and all the men at the front. I think things are starting to change a little bit with more women in the scene who do a lot of things, are involved with lots of things.

Tamarack: I think it's a really hard question to answer and I wish I'd thought more about these things before the interview. I'd say the same, like, there's nothing that I feel like I could really pinpoint here and say it's that much different from my experiences back home... It's a hard question because you kinda get down to, like, well what do you mean when you say sexism, and you kinda have to think about that for a long time and it's probably experienced on lots of levels, all the time, but I wouldn't say I've found it especially hard living in Ireland for general sexism influencing relationships or anything. Like if it's just, I guess, feeling excluded, well, it's maybe even harder to tell, because it's like your foreign, you're coming from a different culture AND you're a woman, so you're kind of got already a few other things going on that might be the reason that that you feel you've been excluded or treated differently. So if you don't think about it too much, which sometimes you don't, y'know, for your own sanity, hahah, you might not sit down and go "oh, well did they treat me like shit because I'm a woman, or because I'm from another country or because I didn't understand their language, or maybe just everything all together!?" Or maybe they just hate me!?"

Dayana: I don't think I can actually think of things that are concrete...

like, it seems that a lot of women, compared with other countries, are a bit more liberal, have more independence. In the punk scene there's less women involved, like really involved in the punk alternative culture. I dunno, for some reason I feel really in the back, at the behind, like we were talking about the other day, all the women who play in bands sing, like all the other bands in the rest of the world... But then I feel bad about it myself.

I could learn to play something else.

Clodagh: I feel that if you were to look at and really critique Irish society, or the way that a person like I might live my life, well with how internalised these things are you just kind of see them as normal. For example, people who are good at bikes and DIY and stuff... I for instance would shy away from that, I'd be more into cooking or whatever, and then I'd feel like, well, why do I go for these typically woman-ey skills or woman interests. Like I went to all-girl schools and the college course I did was maybe 75% women, so sometimes I feel like I've gone for these typical feminine roles... I think that our generation, around me like a lot of people wouldn't have said a lot of things like you could often define as "that's a very sexist comment". Sometimes it comes down to like, something at work, like sometimes I've gone to lift a box or something and it's like "ah, you don't have to lift the box, love", and I'm like... I've been lifting amps and drum-kits up and down flights of stairs for years, I can lift a box of paper, y'know?

That kind of thing for me is almost more humorous, backwards... like, when people do that, but I suppose it's more of a symptom of like, if they do it in that way then they might do it in more important kind of ways.

Dayana: I've always had a strange personality since I was really young, like I was really tom-boy, y'know, playing football and all that kind of thing. And it's not so bad when you're a kid, you don't really realise what sexism is, like people think "what's she doing playing football, oh wait, she's a woman but she plays good", y'know? And they always picked me to play, hahah!! [laughter] And like when I got into skating, people were always impressed, people on the street, cos I used dress so that you wouldn't know if I was a man or a woman, and then they'd realise I was a woman and be like "fuck, what's this fucking girl doing here, go and cook or something!" y'know?! [laughter] Like, "girls shouldn't do that", y'know? Most of the time it made me feel really embarrassed, especially cos I was younger and didn't think so much "fuck that, I should just be myself and not worry about what they think", but I still did, y'know?

Tamarack: I tried to take up skateboarding when I was younger too, and I don't think there were any other skater girls or whatever, but I haven't really dealt with that since I was 14 or 15 or whatever, and all the boys were like "fuck off, we're not gonna hang out with you, you're a slut", and this is all the supposedly alternative boys, so when you live in a really small place it's really hard to take cos they're, like, the "alternative" to all the jocks and they all telling me I'm a slut and telling me they hate me and that I'm not allowed to listen to punk music cos it's theirs. So I'm like, oh man, I don't fit in anywhere! But I mean, I wouldn't deal with that now, and that to me is probably what I'd most commonly identify with really blatant sexism.

Dayana: well, skateboarders are generally really sexist. I think that's one of the things that made me stop skating, like, I was really into punk and I was like, ah fuck, I want to skate, but I feel, like, so lost and these people who are supposed to be my friends making stupid shit jokes at my expense. It was really easy for me to skate, like, cos I used to go to competitions and shit all the time, I used to win all the time because you have like only 3 or 4 others, and they all "skated like girls", hahah!! [laughter]. Y'know, like, just sitting on the skateboard and shit.

Tamarack: Yeah, the only other girls I knew with skateboards only sat on them and, like, smoked cigarettes...

Dayana: Like I used to be sponsored too, this place used to give me clothes to skate, shoes and skateboards, stuff like that, and they were always complaining that I should promote the "girl scene" but I used not to wear the "girl" clothes, and they're like "we're not going to sell anything for girls here if you don't wear girls clothes"... "you should wear that one, it's more tight".

Tamarack: I know, yeah, the lads skater clothes are like, oversize everything, and then the girls shirts come to like, here [hand at waist], and say something like "girls rule" and has a heart!! Y'know?! But yeah, I dunno, I think if I was going to try and define or indentify some sort of low-key type of sexism that happens commonly, like I wouldn't say that I feel that I'm personally being treated badly for being a lady, but I'd say that things that are considered maybe more typically female are looked down on, maybe not the people, maybe they didn't sit there and go "aw, girls, they're all a bunch of fuckin sluts, fuck them" or whatever, but it's still things like... heh, to drag my personal life into this zine that all my friends are going to read, hahah, I might be totally willing to learn all about bikes because Sean's really into bikes and like I can fix bikes and that's cool, and he's a totally open-minded guy and not sexist at all, but on the other hand and he's completely uninterested in learning how to sew... or anything like that, and it's kinda like you were talking about Clodagh, things that are typically feminine that I totally enjoy doing, and like, I don't have a problem with that, but maybe they're kind of looked down upon on the whole by people, and by women, and that it's more that we're excluding those aspects of life than necessarily excluding the person because they're a woman.

I dunno, it's funny you're saying that, cos I was kinda thinking about those things recently, and it seems to me that in the punk scene, these more "typically feminine" things that are often looked down on in society, these are kinda seen to be quite cool and people enjoy them and are into them...?

Dayana: Like what?

Clodagh: Do you mean like, that they're having their time, or that we have them and we think they're cool, or...?

Like that they're generally seen as a worthwhile kinda thing, things like cooking or gardening or craft-ey kinda stuff like printing or sewing or then on the level of just generally being into taking care of one another, y'know?

Tamarack: I dunno, I kinda think that a lot of those things that you listed, with the exclusion of cooking, get more lip-service than they really get integrated? yeah, I would say that. It's like, everyone's "yeah, that's really cool" but I don't see that many people doing these things... like, I see a lot more people playing guitar or whatever, and I'm not saying that it's only for boys, but it wouldn't be considered a typically female thing to do. I still see more people playing in bands than I see... eh... bustin out their latest craftwork, y'know, hahah!! Knitting at gigs or anything like that!

Clodagh: Hey though, what about a cake stall? Shorty brought a cake to the gig the other day...

Tamarack: Did he? Well, good on him, maybe it's coming in... Dayana: But I still think that in the punk scene there's girls cooking more and doing more stuff like that...

Yeah, you do still get more women doing all the cooking for, like, Food Not Bombs or whenever there's some punk-related food thing, like at a punk festival or whatever and in general just probably more women doing that stuff in the punk scene...

Dayana: I dunno, maybe cos like, the way I learned, I learned to cook when I was REALLY really young, y'know? Like, I had to learn to cook to help my mother and help clean and stuff, and my brother never had to do that, and he doesn't know how to cook anything, he can, I dunno... fuckin make coffee or something like that?

what about sexism in the punk scene, male domination, do you think it's something that's inevitable or do you think that you can, like, do things to counteract it? Do you feel discouraged from being involved with things and putting yourself out there in ways that you feel you'd be more criticised than boys might be for doing things? It seems to be a trend everywhere in the punk scenes that there's more boys involved than girls...

Clodagh: In... visible roles.

Hmm... both in visible roles & in terms of numbers I think generally, but I guess more so in visible roles.

Tamarack: When you say the punk scene, just to clarify, are you mostly just talking about, like, friends we would all have in common and music, or...? well, kind of the punk, squatter, activist sort of scene, those kinda...

Tamarack: Okay, yeah, stuff like that, cos I would say that I notice more sexism in activism kind of things than just in music. Or... I wouldn't be so intimidated, necessarily, by boys in bands vs. boys with megaphones. [laughter]

I mean the whole general spectrum of scruffy, lefty punk types.

Dayana: I don't think I feel, like, discouraged... it's a bit difficult, like, with me, I was much more active in Brazil, I did much more things for myself, cos I could understand everything, but then when I came over here I had to learn the language and stuff. And I still can't do all the things, for example if I want to do a zine, or e-mail, or whatever, it just takes so long, or if I want to put on -

Kyrie: Which I got to Ireland, I was all like "oh my god, there's a punk scene?" but some of my friends had to stop me and remind me that the amount of grrrls/ladies involved now is kinda unprecedented and is a total dream compared to a few years ago. You know, everyone kept reminding me that until only a few years ago, Clodagh was one of only a few active womyn involved in visible punk scene stuff!!! The town I'm from, Brisbane, it's quite a small city that goes through waves of activity and it really suffers when people leave to go traveling or move away. So there have been many times where I've been one of only a handful of "active" wimmin involved in my punk community. Like, of course there are loads of right-on lads and many of them are my dearest friends, but it can just feel a little bit weird to be a feminist and to be involved in a culture where wimmin often aren't very involved. It's very easy to feel intimidated in spaces that feels like it's marked most definitely "male". I do a record and zine distro, I've been doing it for about 5 years now, and it was actually really scary when I first started taking my stuff to shows. Even though I've been involved in punk for about 11 or 12 years, it suddenly felt really weird to walk into such a gendered space where guys are typically the "active" or "visible" participants in the scene, and to suddenly take up a whole bunch of space and set up my distro. It might sound inconsequential or trivial, but I found it really intimidating and it was hard to feel the confidence I usually feel. And if I felt like that in a room of people I know really well, I can't imagine how a grrrl/womyn completely new to the punk scene would feel.

Tamarack: I'd probably be discouraged from doing things because I saw mostly lads being involved, but half of that is probably my own ego problems, like from seeing anyone involved and being like, oh, I don't know if I could do it as good as them, but...half of it is, like, I'm only going to identify with guys to a certain degree...like, you and I might have tons of things in common, but at some point, and it doesn't like make up my whole personality to be, like, "I'm a woman", but there is a point at which I would identify with you differently if you were a girl. So, maybe never having, or having very few role-models, sort of puts the pressure on to a degree. Like, if I'm going to do this, start a band, or write a zine, or fuckin start a religion or whatever, I've gotta do it twice as good as any guy kinda thing... But as I say, that's probably half my...like, it's up to me to get over it, but nobody's going to, I guess, change that for me...unless someone feels like changing that for me?! [laughter]

Clodagh: When I first started going to gigs in the mid-to-late 90's there was fuck-all girls involved, noce... I remember that there'd be, like, maybe 5 girls at a gig...like, really nobody. And compared to then, now it's like...woooah!

Like, sometimes it's seems there's 50-50 girls, and there's girls at the front, or there's girls who maybe got in through a boyfriend and they're still there afterwards, and that's cool. So I think it's just a matter of time before girls are in loads of bands and doing loads more stuff.

You think?

Clodagh: Yeah...yeah I'm optimistic about it. I would youse find that aswell?

Tamarack: I'd agree, yeah, things are getting better, and considering that the population is more widely comprised of women, it's only a matter of time until...we take over, bwahahah!! [laughter]

Clodagh: Your days are numbered!

Tamarack: I think Ladyfest could be an example of trying to do things where you have ladies recognising each other, which I think is such a huge important thing, like, if I'm going to go to a gig, or if I'm going to go out...well...it just happens that gigs are maybe the most attended social event that I can think of...a lot more people go to bands than go to the zine library...

Clodagh: ...ooh!!

Tamarack: Hahah, yeah, get that in there too! Don't get that in there actually!

Too late! You signed the contract!

Tamarack: Hahah...em, but yeah, I will make a point, and I don't mean this falsely, to go up and talk to my women friends, and identify them, because I think there was a point in my life when I realised that I was more likely to come into a circle and start talking to the guys because I felt I needed their approval before I needed to make the connection to women, and probably a lot of women do this or have come to a similar conclusion and maybe moved on from it, and it's also just for my own pleasure or whatever, that I enjoy having women friends. So when I go in, I'm gonna go and see her and her and her, before I'm going to go and see as opposed to coming up to say hello to Sean and "oh, hi..." on the side. Cos you start feeling like you're always an accessory...and I'm not, goddamit!!

Dayana: And it's always Sean & Tamarack, not Tamarack & Sean...hahah!!

Tamarack: Yeah! Get that in, hahah!!

Okay, okay, I only say it cos I knew Sean first!!!

Tamarack: Yeah, and everyone else cos I'm from Foreign, right? Hahah!

Dayana: It's much more difficult for some reason for a woman to be friends with a woman than for a man to be friends with a man. I don't know why...like, it's gonna be much easier for men to have a friendship but with women it's going to be more complicated, for some reason...I feel I have much more male friends over here than women, like, I don't really like a lot of people...like, a lot of women...

Clodagh: What, you're a sexist! [laughter]

Tamarack: Stop oppressing us!

Clodagh: Like you find you have a lot more in common with men or...

Dayana: Yeah, like, I dunno, I have much more male friends than woman friends, and I have more fights with the woman friends. What I think about it is...like, you can see how there's more competition encouraged between women in society in general, and...

Dayana: Yeah, like, I've got a good example, like when I used to skate and there were lots of girls that I would have liked to be friends with but they didn't want to be friends with me because they want to be better than me in skating and everything else, y'know? And they'd never be friends with me and talk behind my back and stuff cos it's like some kind of competition, like they have to go for the best men, she's the woman of the house, she's the woman in the punk scene.

Tamarack: Yeah, there's a real mentality like "there can be only one punk lady and that's it...like Highlander but with mohawks or something, heheh...

I noticed that before with certain people, that they'd feel very threatened especially if they for a long time have been the only woman in a group of friends...

Dayana: ...and then when other women get involved, like territorial or something...yeah. Like, I don't really feel like that but I think other people feel like that towards me, like I had friends who had girlfriends, and the girlfriend doesn't like me because I'm friends with their boyfriend and doing much more things with them like skating or stuff like that, and the girlfriend's just like a "girlfriend" and they've got much more to talk about with me, much more in common. So they got really pissed off and fought with me...just really jealous and see me as competition or something...

Tamarack: I think that's really common...and maybe it does come from growing up and having some innate feeling that you're not as good and that the world doesn't exist for you before it exists before your brother or male friend or father, it's for them, and you get sloppy seconds kind of thing...like there's limited resource, like I gotta fight you for it, there's only so much space...

Dayana: Like, I know I can do anything that any men can do, like when I was younger I really wanted to prove to myself that I could do the same things to the same level that all the guys could do...

Tamarack: I think it can both be a positive thing but also sometimes come from not feeling very good about yourself, not saying that you feel that way, but like, I was a tomboy too and I'd go out feeling like I had to do this thing because I feel totally unnoticed otherwise, I'm just totally relegated to the girlfriend ranks...

Clodagh: Hmmm...I'm just thinking about all the people I've probably made feel like that, that I wasn't spending time with the girls or involved with them...I was possibly that girl who's like "oh, that Clodagh one, she'll talk to my boyfriend or she'll talk to lads but she won't talk to me", just I suppose I know them better and sometimes I'm not very good socially...or I'm not very good at conversations, but this person I know, they're into this or they're into that, how do I start a conversation with this girl who I know nothing about...

I think it can be a sort of self-fulfilling prophesy kind of thing...like, maybe a lot of girls think that to be taken seriously they have to prove themselves to be "just one of the lads", y'know? Like, I'm not here because I'm a girl and I want a cool boyfriend or whatever, I'm here because I'm into this music and this way of thinking and so on...

Tamarack: But I'm not one of the lads, I'm a girl, goddamit!! Like, I know what you mean and that's just it, that mentality totally exists, and it's really frustrating because

So people feel that they have to do that to be taken seriously, but then maybe that precludes being friends on a more open level with other women.

Tamarack: Yeah like if you're going to be friends with another woman then you're admitting that you are different from the guys, and that's why having to relate to them differently than you relate to the guys, and that's why having them around is bad, cooking or sewing, god forbid, hahah!! And then they're all gonna find you out,

Dayana: I remember the time I put on this gig, more of a festival really, two days and with workshops and stuff like that, and I did it basically 95% myself, and I had a friend who everyone was like "aw, that's really great Dayana that you're computers. And then with this festival" y'know, cos I was the girl!! helping your friend

Tamarack: Did you tell them, is that why you left Brazil? [laughter]

Dayana: Hahah...no, so they just gave him all the credit... if it was him or me,

Like, one thing I constantly noticed, living in Denmark is that the women there, the girls in the punk scene, do seem a lot closer to each other and supportive of each other, and sort of exclusive of males from their groups, like so that there's no reliance... and often kind of a lot a positive way, like way than they'd be friends with boys, and I think I noticed it cos it seemed to stand out in comparison to...

Clodagh: It's not the Irish way...

Tamarack: I think that's great, I think that's the only way that you're going to feel, as a lady, woman, girl, whatever, better about yourself and to not have to prove that you're on your own thing with your girlfriends and face up to all those things that you see sometimes make it hard to relate to other women, and deal with those. Cos when you see a group of ladies getting on well and doing things, it's just more powerful and productive guys and work within that framework... I'm not saying that infiltrate a group of work together, I'm not sure if you get what I mean... guys & girls shouldn't Yeah, I think I know what you mean. It's just stronger as a whole when people have their own strength in their own small groups and so on, if you're not trying to prove that you're something that you shouldn't be wasting your energy have to prove.

Tamarack: I think it's thin your own community, and you need to have that... like that sort of support within your own community, and you need to have that... like there's no point in only hanging out with white people, it's if you're not white there, it doesn't make them bad, it just means that you need just gonna alienate you.

Well, I think it doesn't necessarily have to be a bad thing that women in the punk scene might be more interested in cooking or sewing or something, just maybe that there's more respect for those things as there is for playing guitar in a band or something. Which I think there often is, or definitely is now more than in the past. Like in dominant DIY punk culture, there's definitely more of a woman else that wouldn't have been there so much in the 80's or early 90's or whatever, y'know?

Tamarack: I think I notice a big difference maybe between here and Canada, like, Vancouver is more or less known as one of the gay capitals of North America, to a degree, like, it's fairly gay friendly, a lot more than here, and I know this isn't strictly on the topic of sex relationships but it's gender issue, definitely, and I think that has to be integrated into the punk scene and larger communities and all the communities before sexism starts getting better, or whatever...

Clodagh: I think that in the Summer I heard Carmel saying that she was considering starting a women's group, not for a particular reason to discuss, just that we all got together and hung out. But, y'know... I'd say you'd get a slagging, like.

Yeah you would. You probably would.

Tamarack: Ah yeah, but you'd get a slagging for anything I reckon... you'd get a slagging for not starting one almost, hahah!!

Like, I remember reading about things like that when I was younger, women-only spaces and so on, maybe about 5 years ago, and feeling quite threatened by it, and being automatically negative towards it and thinking what's this, it's just counter-productive, seperatist y'know...

Clodagh: Reverse sexism...

Yeah... and so on, and like, we're trying to work towards the same goals so why...

Tamarack: Do you still feel that way?

No, but it took a while, like it wasn't until I'd read of various accounts and people's personal experiences and talked to various people about it before I realised it was a positive thing and the reasons for it, and that I didn't need to feel threatened. But my immediate reaction WAS feeling threatened by it, so I imagine that a lot of people probably would react the same way. I do imagine a lot of people probably would just slag you for it, but... fuck them. The next question is just about that, humour and all. I've noticed that some people from other countries don't really get some jokes and just feel really uncomfortable because of things that people would find funny and the kind of jokes that people would make here, just automatically...

Tamarack: Like, it's not the same thing over here at all, but back home, in general, calling someone a cunt is not done... it's just really offensive, and I don't know what to liken it to...

Well, here it was the one thing that you wouldn't say to your mum.

Tamarack: Yeah, but there we wouldn't even say it amongst ourselves. And not in all circles, like, I was certainly swearing up a blue streak by the time I was 9 or 10, as any good working class family member does, hahah, but not...

Clodagh: Not the c-word.

Tamarack: No, not by the late teens even... it was something really personal and really offensive...

Well, it was always the, eh, worst word that I knew...

Tamarack: Yeah, but people still say it, like even I say it now, and I'll say it on the phone to someone back home and I'll just be like "yeah, he's a right fuckin' cunt" in my weird hybrid speak and they're just like "eh..?!" So I'd advise anyone who's talking to a fresh-off-the-board North American to maybe not call them a cunt in the first 10 minutes!

Dayana: I remember, it really pissed me off, I met this guy in the library from South America, I don't remember exactly where, and it was so weird, this guy just came over to me cos he saw I took Portuguese books and was like "oh, you speak Portuguese blah blah" and then he came up to me in the shop I used to work in and said "yeah, I came because I'm interested in you" and I said "why?" and he was like "aw, y'know like..." and so I said "no, why exactly are you interested in me, you don't know me?". So he was like "you know why we want a woman, we want a woman for cooking and stuff like that" so I was just like..."aargh!!".

So what did you do?

I started screaming and shouting at him and he couldn't understand why, I think he didn't understand how bad the things he was saying to me were, and I started screaming at him in Portuguese and said lots of shit to him, and then he kept coming back and ringing me and trying to talk to me!

Fuckin stalking you.

Dayana: Yeah! Just really horrible, you know, why do you want a woman, "to cook and have sex and stuff like that", y'know...

Yeah... I guess when that's what you hear all the time, growing up, you're not going to question it...

Dayana: Like, I did get really pissed off but I know that in his culture like, guys, they don't give you flowers before they ask you to cook or whatever they just say "go in and cook!", y'know...

Tamarack: The thing with the humour, aside from the swear-words, I'd defend this if you all weren't Irish if you were a bunch of Canadians clapping the Irish am a very very sarcastic person myself, which I try not to be all the time, but it is unfortunate that, like, it does sometimes go to a complete extreme to cover up dysfunctional problems in friendships or whatever... Like, I've had serious difficulties talking to some people, where I've tried to be really straight-up with them and they'll fall back on the humour repeatedly, in a way that's really completely inappropriate. And it wouldn't happen near as often back home.

Can you think of examples? Like, a certain situation?

Tamarack: well, say where I could maybe take you aside, like maybe you made a joke about something and despite that all the colour drained from my face you continued joking and I took you aside, like I did with someone who I would consider my friend here who happens to be male, and just said like "look, you really can't be joking about that, it's really personal to me and so on" and the response was "oh, it's just a joke, you don't really understand" etc and not even a "oh, I'm sorry". I think it's just hard for humans in general to maybe face up to their emotions and be straight-up...dare I say...perhaps...Ireland is...perhaps a millisecond behind other countries as well...

Yeah, I know what you mean.

Tamarack: I'm not saying everywhere else in the world is better, I'm obviously here because I want to be here, but sometimes...

Don't worry, we won't kick you out for saying what you think! [laughter]

Tamarack: Yeah, you can't, I've got a card! [laughter]

The way I see it is that it's not JUST in a sexist kind of way, but it is that as well. Like, it can just be in a way that's negative to people in general. But then it also comes into gender and sexuality issues too and has an effect on that, and people from North America and Australia and so on don't seem to be as offended by language and stuff like that, that kind of humour. But people especially in European countries seem really shocked if you say, I dunno, cunt or bitch or something that's taken for granted here. Or just that, well, a lot of the way that people relate to one another one here is through insults, y'know?

Tamarack: Yeah, like abuse is affection and that...

Clodagh: I only kind of copped on to that recently... "hold on, we're sitting around and we're all just telling each other how shit each other is" and this is... a normal good evening, well spent! what the fuck!?

I think even when it's between friends it still affects you, your self-view and so on...

Clodagh: It's damaging.

Tamarack: Yeah, totally. I think, in the sexual sense, like I haven't had anything that I can think of said to me, but I definitely have heard of a few examples where REALLY inappropriate things were said to... certain people. At a gig recently someone said to one of the ladies "Ah shut up or I'll rape you"..., as a joke, like...that's not fucking funny, that's not on at all, and like, I'm not sure but I think, a few months down the line someone kind of said "come on, you don't say that!". But like, I just couldn't imagine what would be going through someone's head to think "that's funny". No, that's not funny, she's outside crying afterwards. It's not always that extreme, obviously...

I think that's one of the things that kind of made other people...

Dayana: ...very uncomfortable. Like, last year sometime, there was a girl from North America staying in the squat who felt really uncomfortable and disgusted, like wrote us a letter saying that she hated being there and thought that people were really sexist and macho and didn't feel safe... I couldn't really understand before...but I think it's just the way Irish people talk. The words they try and offend each other with, the kind of jokes they make, that shouldn't be taken seriously, like sexist or macho or racist that aren't meant to be taken seriously, but you shouldn't joke with this kind of thing, you should be here to try and challenge this kind of thing.

Tamarack: Like, Irish people, culturally, probably come from a much darker past than white Canadians would, and I can understand how black humour would totally arise out of that, and with each generation is getting, hopefully, a shade more... considerate and compassionate to one another...y'know, there's not enough love to go around well, like just about that joke, I think that was one thing where people who would usually go "ah shut up, it's only a joke" said no, that's going too far...

Dayana: But when people say "ah it's only a joke" and you're really fuckin angry and say something about it, they just call you P.C. and stuff like that, and then you feel really bad. Sometimes you really feel like you should do or say something about things like that but sometimes you just say nothing cos you know they're just going to say "fuck off, you're too P.C." or something.

And then it's, like, a big group of people all laughing before you can say anything, it's just a joke and if you don't get it then shut up, it's your problem.

Tamarack: To give you a bit of the other side of the coin, I guess just to throw a comment out there, probably something that some of us ladies too need to acknowledge on our own progression to stop being sexist, whether it's treating other girls like shit or whatever, is also to not, people trying to be "lads" in a way... I don't know if you understand... It's like, okay, say I'm a girl, and I feel weak in comparison to the male majority, in a few ways, maybe not so much physically, but I feel less empowered, so some reactions are to kind of get louder and so on, and I realise that I will say things to my male friends that I would not say to another woman, I'll be a lot harsher and rougher with them, and like, I try to check myself on it, but like...that's not fair either.

Clodagh: Hahah, yeah, I think you do...hahah...stuff you say that if you said it to me I'd probably cry!

Tamarack: Yeah...no, like, exactly! And it's just like, there's also the individual relationship you have with the person regardless of their gender, but...well, I'm not getting any worse!

I think it's kind of a catch 22 situation...like, if people relate to you in that way, in a "burly" kind of way, you've got a choice of either reacting to them in the same way, which kind of, in a certain way, retains self-respect and keeps it a joke but which you don't like, but then if you don't react in that way you feel a bit shit about yourself and like you're letting yourself be pushed around...

Tamarack: I don't think it's self-respect, I think it's just saving face... yeah, I think that's more what it is actually...

I think if I really wanted to maintain my self-respect I could act a lot more honestly and actually tell them how I felt instead of...

But then that creates this awkward situation.

Tamarack: Bring it on, bring on the awkward!

Did any of you have experience of sexual assault or rape incidents within the punk/activist scene you came from, before here and the one recently?

Dayana: Yeah...in Brazil...not exactly, but some cases of a girl sleeping with a guy and the girl wakes up in the middle of the night and the guy's touching her and she's like "what the fuck?". I think when someone does stuff like that in the punk scene or an anarchist group, probably the first thing they do is exclusion, not like it was here...

I'm not sure how you mean...

Clodagh: what, like, the girl went "what are you doing?", *smack!* and then it was all over?

Dayana: More like EVERYONE went like that, just immediately...and he's not allowed to, like, stay in the punk scene anymore...and myself like, with the thing with ***, I felt really awkward, like I should have done something more...cos, like, he tried to get with me and I said no loads of times and when I eventually just said "look, that's not going to happen" his girlfriend had just arrived, after a few seconds, and I was like "fuck...what am I going to say, she saw just me & him here, no one else around, what's she going to think", y'know?

Tamarack: Just your word against his...em...well, before we came to Ireland we were in Australia for about 6 months, staying with a friend in Tasmania, and one of the people that we were friends with, that we were staying with, they were living in this fairly small town which didn't really have a punk scene going on at all, and the reason she had left the larger city that she used to live in and wasn't going back was cos there was this guy who had been, not just accused, like it seemed pretty obvious that these weren't just random accusations and, I mean, it seemed like sexual assault, I really think it should be "guilty" until proven innocent" rather than the opposite, especially when it's happening repeatedly with a person with a bad track record of personality on top of that, and this guy who had assaulted these women, just nothing ever happened about it in the end and he was still going to gigs and up to stuff. So she was like, "I'm not going back there". So that's just one person and I don't think she even told people, generally, like the scene at large wouldn't have known that, it was maybe just one or two people. I think that's something for everyone to think about; that there could be people now somewhere going "I'm not going back there because that's happened". I'm not necessarily talking about current events here, just about how far-reaching that can be anywhere... I also had a very shitty situation back home where two friends of mine, two really long-term friends, one of them said that the other had sexually assaulted her. It was really crazy and my reaction was just like "look dude, I don't really think that was the case, I was there" and it wasn't until more recent events happened where the same sort of politics came up that I started thinking about it again and just how like, as close as these people were to me, my initial reaction is still like...like you don't want to have to sit down and take it seriously because it seems that as soon as you stop and listen to it you're saying, yes it happened, and there's a real fear about acknowledging it...it's like, okay, if I listen to her and I say "well what do you feel about it and what do you think happened" and so on, then that's going to be equivalent to me saying "yes, he raped you"

which...like...it's a fuckin horrible, really really, I dunno, shitty situation for anyone to be in on any level...but I dunno... Ireland, in contrast, like this is the first time I've seen it dealt with in this kind of "let's have meetings" situation, which I think...I dunno...you'll probably have to wait another year...or two...before you ask me what I think of it, it's very strenuous to go through...community meetings about rape. Especially when the accused shows up...can be very stressful.

Well...I think almost nobody here has any experience of that happening as a "punk scene issue"...like, I've read about various incidents in different scenes and the way people would deal with it, but I don't think people have experience of that happening here.

Dayana: Well I think from the opposite side, like, so many women are raped and they don't say because they're really embarrassed and, like, when you say something about your sexual side, something really personal, no-one's going to say it's rape cos it's something personal, like most people don't want to know what's happened...and everyday I hear and hear more and more stories about girls who something like this happened to...doesn't necessarily have to be rape, but sexual assault or...like, I didn't realise how many girls who are my friends had had such...were raped before, or had some really really bad experience like that...I just realised this not too long ago...

Tamarack: I think, back home like, I mean, I've had friends that have gone...through different levels of situations. But over here like, we have had friends like who've said like, "I was raped and I never told anyone" or "I was abused by a family member when I was young and I never told anyone" or "and I never went to counselling". And there's such a stigma here against going to counselling... Like I mean I can go home [to Canada] and go for coffee with one of my girlfriends and say, "y'know, I've been feeling really depressed and I'm thinking of going to see a therapist" and it's not considered a weird thing, it's like "yeah, that's sound, why wouldn't you go talk to someone?". Like, y'know, hopefully your parents would give you some money to do this...and here it's just, like...even, like, I've personally said this to someone really close to me here, like when I first got back and was having a really hard time adjusting, I was like "I dunno, I'm having a really hard time, I'm kinda thinking I might see a counsellor for a while and just have someone to talk to". And it was just met with that silence. That good old...Irish silence...of like, "hmmmm..."

...eh...do you want another cup of tea?

Tamarack: Yeah! Like, "TEA then! Will I make the tea!". It's just, like, you don't talk about it, and it's shocking to me to know that, like considering how few women I do know here, like, that there's that percentage of abuse and assault that has gone unspoken and has gone without any attempt at formal treatment at all, just for their own personal sanity, and it's just really unfortunate and I hope...I hope that I stay here to see the day and I can say "I'm going to therapy!" and everyone goes "ah, grand!" hahah!

I dunno, I think it's loads of reasons, it's a social thing. Part of it is the way nobody wants to...eh...like, if anybody kinda acts in a way that is different or even...seems to have regard for themselves...then people are like, "oh, why do you think you're so special?". Y'know, "you going doing this, you're just the same as anyone else, why would you have to go to counselling?"

Tamarack: Yeah, like "you think your troubles are so hard, let me tell you..." Yeah, and like so people find it difficult to do or say that...

Clodagh: I dunno, for me recently, loads of people I know are in counselling, but I don't want to go "oh, y'know, it's fine, blah blah blah" cos maybe they're not comfortable with it...

Hmmm...but people still wouldn't talk about it openly, ever.

Clodagh: Well, like, I went to counselling and I don't care, I'd sing it from the tree-tops, but just in case someone else is a bit weird about it... But two people I can think of went "oh yeah, like, if you can't solve your own problems, y'know..."

Tamarack: "That's not very D.I.Y." [laughter]

well, I think people are a bit like that...like...I went to counselling for a while, but I wouldn't feel comfortable saying it around people...I think that people would view me differently or...

Tamarack: Hahah...Cormac: cuc-kuu!" [laughter]

Hahah! yeah, well, I don't care about that so much, more that they'd just think that I was feeling sorry for myself, that I thought my problems were much worse than other peoples...and I know it's bollocks, but I still...feel it, y'know? And I think a lot of other people probably feel the same...

Clodagh: Secretly we're all going to counselling but everyone's afraid to say it! Dayana: My family made me go when I was younger but it did nothing for me...I didn't feel comfortable at all and it didn't help...

Tamarack: It doesn't necessarily help, yeah, like I went to a counsellor when I was younger too and it was just a waste of my time, absolutely, and that was unfortunate. I think that also ties into being of a lower economic standing, like probably if we were all rich and came from rich backgrounds it'd be totally more acceptable to like, have your own personal psychologist, but instead it's like "you think that you're so special that you'd waste all this money on going to a therapist" so I think there's a real economic tie-in with that... If you're not rich, like until recently there probably wasn't so many rich people anyway, so it's just like that...

I think it kinda ties in with the sexual assault and rape thing as well, like how women are afraid to say about it cos they think people will judge them harshly because of it and think that they're looking for special attention or something. In the way you might feel that people would be talking about you or whatever, if you say something about going to counselling or being depressed or something, that if you say these others things, because so many people have such low self-esteem in the first place, it's kind of like "oh, you think somebody would have that kind of interest you anyway, who do you think you are?"

Clodagh: I guess if you say that you were sexually assaulted you're really opening a horrible can of worms that nobody wants to hear about...

Yeah, and nobody knows how to deal with it or what to say... Like, how do you feel that the incident recently in the squat was dealt with, by people in general and do you think there's any difference between the way males dealt with it and females dealt with it and if there was a problem with either, more so than the other?

Clodagh: I think people dealt with it pretty well...I think initially there was a period of shock and then people started talking about it...it was probably helpful that she wasn't around...maybe if she had to hear it, she wouldn't really have been down with 20 people discussing this outside a gig...but I think it was a positive thing, that people were talking about it...

Tamarack: In comparison I guess to anything else I've up to this point been through or read about or whatever, it's definitely so far the most pro-active approach... I do feel, like, y'know, it was taken seriously, largely, and I don't have any bad feelings about anyone, except for 1 or 2 people that were very directly involved...1 person especially...but, y'know, as far as people coming together and talking about it and having different viewpoints...I mean, I talked directly to people who completely disagree with me as far as what they think happened and I still feel that it was dealt with...well, I think a very with, and there's probably no way to come out of it feeling good in the end, so... I don't feel good about it, in that sense, but I also couldn't imagine it happening back home, so maybe that's a credit...

Clodagh: A credit to the Irish, after all the bashing you've done so far! Tamarack: A credit to this small, small island! After all, what is Ireland other than a small island off the coast of Europe anyway, hahah!

With other incidents I've heard about in other countries and scenes and so on, I've heard of a few where the immediate reaction was just total ostracism and social exclusion, and I'm not sure if that's the most productive or best way of approaching it. Like, I can see reasons for both sides, why it is and it isn't, but I don't... like I think that on one hand it can make other women in general feel safer, and the victim directly involved, and that's maybe the main reason you'd see, but at the same time it doesn't change the person's attitude and it doesn't change people in general's attitudes and it doesn't make the person themselves deal with the issues that caused them to do this and consequently other people who undoubtedly would have the same internal... mental processes or whatever that would allow them to rape or sexually assault people, it doesn't force them to deal with it. I think...

Tamarack: See, those things like making someone face up to their own issues isn't something that you can legislate them to do or that you can come to a unanimous handshaking decision that so-and-so now has to face up to his rapist tendencies... I'm fairly happy with the conclusion that has so far been made, I don't know what power it has at the end of the day, but the latest decision here was that the fellow who was involved has a 6-month "cooling out" period, and I'm happy enough with that, because despite the fact that, like in my heart I fully believe that he is guilty of sexually assaulting someone, and I also can appreciate that it'll never be proved and I think that something like a "cooling out" period is good because you're not saying you're ostracised, and as much as it's going to come across, it's important to say "we haven't judged, it's not like we know this happened", whatever, but there's, like, ten different things that can be pointed to, just like "you made people uncomfortable, you did x to this person who's here and says it and you've admitted that you did it and didn't realise you were being inappropriate" etc. Everyone just needs to go away from each other now... like, I mean, if I had suggested a cooling out period... like, the cooling out period that was voted on was like, 6 months, and then re-evaluation... I wanted a year, and then re-evaluation, because I felt that would be long enough, it's not like forever, it's not 5 years or some ridiculously long amount of time, but at the same time it's enough time that hopefully this person will some morning wake up and stop going "I'm such a victim" and actually go "what did I do...". You know, it's enough time that they can stop just trying to modify their behaviour to please us, please the greater society, but it's more like we want you back in a year, we want to talk to you, we don't want you to fuck off and move somewhere else, but we really need you to go away and fucking sort shit out on your own". I may never personally be comfortable with this person, but that doesn't mean I'm completely unopen to it progressing in such a way that he's allowed into things...

Clodagh: well, the thought just struck me that... well, in this case the person doesn't think they did anything wrong, but if someone might go "yeah"... that we have to allow for them to go "Jesus, like... I fuckin did this horrible thing and ruined this girl's life and I will change what I want to be and I still want to be around these friends and you to help me get better so as to not be so horrible again", rather than just go... you know, give them the death penalty... I think, if nothing else, like, you were saying that no-one can feel good, and maybe some guys will think "god, like, that time I had sex with that girl maybe she wasn't really into it or was a bit drunk" or girls would feel a bit more empowered...

Dayana: It's maybe sometimes really difficult to say when you're drunk... if you express yourself that you want to or that you don't want to, maybe you don't want to, you can't really express it most of the time, just lie down and oh, this is happening now, we're here now and you don't have time to think about any of the stuff... like, oh fuck, now I have to do it, I'm here, I've no clothes on, you know, stuff like that... it can feel really horrible...

I think a lot of it is that people have different ideas of what's acceptable and what's forceful and so on...

Dayana: Well, I think it's the fault of both people, for women who don't express themselves very well, if people are drunk... not in this case, just in general... I just mean that if you can't really express yourself and you have sex and then after you feel paranoid about what happened, I think it's the fault of both... I think you have to really perceive what's going on and see if the person's really comfortable to have sex, like ask "are you okay, are you sure" and stuff like that and probably the fault of the other side not to say "I'm not sure I want to do this"...

Clodagh: Just to say, like, "is it okay if we have sex?"

Tamarack: Well, I've said that before to people and I don't think it's a horrible thing to have to say, and I mean, I think you can tell, like if somebody suddenly kind of stops, you know, like, you're getting all hot and heavy and they suddenly stop moving and they're kind of like "...em..." I think that should kinda tip you off, like if you like them enough to be there in the first place, whether you're half-drunk as it usually is or you're not, it's still... you know, "is this okay, do you not want to do this?"

I think you pretty much have to do that...

Tamarack: Yeah, and it's really not the end of the world, you actually can say it and the person may very well thank you for it, like "thank you, cos I didn't know how to say yes I am" or "no I'm not" and I just wanted to know that you were... still paying attention! That this wasn't going on without me! [laughter]

Kylie: Until I was in Dublin, I hadn't really dealt with an incident of sexual assault at a "community level" before. But I most certainly had very real experience dealing with the effects of sexual assault within my immediate circle of friends and extended community of friends. One of the reasons I think I probably didn't deal with it at a "community level" before is because many times, the victims/survivors (myself included) have felt like all your energy is going to just surviving, just basically trying to get through it at a personal level, and you don't feel like you just don't have the energy to take it further in terms of a community reaction or response. It's exhausting and upsetting to know that everyone is talking about you (but maybe not talking to you about it) and maybe feeling like you're going through it all over again. Like Tamarack said, sometimes it's easier to just leave town than deal with it. When we had discussions in Dublin, several other incidents got brought up, and some people expressed the opinion of "like, wow, I had no idea that sexual assault had got so common in the punk/activist community." I actually don't think that it's got more common, I think that it's got more common to feel like you can TELL people about it, more common for victims/survivors to feel like they (we) don't necessarily have to keep it a secret. Although we have a LONG way to go, I feel like there is, at the very least, the START of a (pretty informal) support network to discuss these issues when they come up.

Recently, we had a sexual assault workshop at the Belladonna DIY Fest in Australia (<http://www.belladonnadiy.org>), and some of us realised how inadequately we have responded to issues in the past, like by talking about this stuff, we are NOW able to realise how we could have reacted/responded WAY better. I'm not necessarily talking about serious sexual assault, but stuff like inappropriate or unwanted touching and sexist behaviour.

Like, someone in our circle of friends is saying a lot of fucked-up shit or doing some inappropriate touching that is obviously making a lot of people uncomfortable, but no-one's really had to deal with this situation before with their friends. So unfortunately there have been a few times where it's awkward and uncomfortable and because no-one is really sure how to deal with it, that it ends up NEVER really being properly addressed with the perp.

Also, we've talked about how a lot of us are feminist and pro-feminist and fight this stuff in many other places, but find we're often really easily silenced and intimidated, and unable to confront this shit when it happens with our friends. It really is fuckin hard, and that's why I think it's important to document the way different communities have dealt with incidences of sexual assault and sexist behaviour, so that we don't always have to start from scratch. Part of this was making the "what do we do when" sexual assault zine distributed at Belladonna that documented different situations.

So yeah, I think documenting this stuff in zines is an awesome idea and so is just generally discussing this stuff. When we had a "wimmin's meeting" in Dublin, we discussed that it might be a good idea to meet with each other every couple of months just to check in with each other, check that everyone is okay, just to mention anything that might have happened or anything that needs to be addressed like inappropriate touching/sexist behaviour/fucked-up attitudes.

It's also a really positive thing to have discussions with each other about -- consent and boundaries. Like maybe your actions wouldn't be classified as sexual assault, but try to think about times where maybe someone didn't really want to have sex with you initially, but ended up saying "yes" because you persisted in asking them and they found it was just easier to go along with it than to keep resisting, especially if alcohol blurred the lines a little. At a pro-active personal level, like Clodagh mentioned, you can also just ask people you're involved with stuff like "is it okay if we have sex?" You know, it doesn't really have to be a big deal or a big conversation, it just has to be a little question like "are you okay with this?" It doesn't really have to be awkward, it's just really nice to know that the other person (or people) involved feel present and engaged with the situation. And even being aware of body language and non-verbal signs, like if someone's body is obviously screaming "no", stuff like that.

And in regard to what you wrote about with other incidents I've heard about in other countries and scenes and so on, I've heard of a few where the immediate reaction was just total ostracism and social exclusion, and I'm not sure if that's the most productive or best way of approaching it. If the accused person/perpetrator is obviously a bit of an asshole, someone who a lot of people have had difficulties with and bad feelings about, then it's often a lot easier to accept an accusation of sexual assault about them. Do you know what I mean? I felt like, with the situation in Dublin, that because a lot of people had conflicts and problems and uncomfortable feelings about the perpetrator before, it was almost easier to believe that yeah, he had done it, he was capable of it.

And it's therefore maybe easier to ostracise and exclude them from the community for a certain amount of time. I kinda wonder what if the accused person is someone that we all love to bits, someone really right-on and not manipulative, someone that we could NEVER imagine doing something like that, would it be harder to believe the victim/survivor? And would it be a lot harder to call them on their shit and ostracise them for a certain time, if that's what "the community" wanted???? Just something I wonder about... Yeah maybe exclusion isn't always the best idea, because the person may not really face up to what they've done, never really deal with why they act like that. And if we ostracise them, maybe they'll just move on to a different community or a different circle of friends, and continue that behaviour without it ever really being addressed.

Like Tamarack said, yeah maybe you'd never personally feel comfortable being around that person, but you can see why they should be allowed to stay in the community to a certain extent. And if we do choose to stay involved with a perpetrator, I think it's important that new people getting involved with that person are made aware of their history when necessary. BUT, I also think that it's always incredibly important to remember the wishes of victims/survivors - if they say that they are not comfortable to keep participating in their community, to go to events, to shows, to meetings, whatever, because the perp might be present, then exclusion SHOULD be considered. It's not fair that the victim/survivor has to be alienated or excluded from their community and feel like shit all over again. I think it's also important to take notice if the victim/survivor explicitly says they are NOT comfortable with the "using-violence-against-violence-to-prove-that-violence-is-wrong" approach aka beating the shit out the perpetrator, then it's not really cool to go ahead and just do it anyway. You know, at the time I was kinda involved in meetings in Ireland, it was very stressful and exhausting and most nights we talked into the early hours, about how we felt and "what is to be done" but also tried to remember what the victim/survivor has actually asked to happen. Even in discussions and meetings, the attitudes, assumptions and stuff that a lot of people expressed brought up a lot of fucked-up attitudes and I reckon these need to be addressed just as much as the actual incident. For example, one opinion kept surfacing that an accusation of sexual assault is not considered legitimate if that person has had sex with multiple partners. These people seemed to forget that there is a difference between CONSENSUAL MUTUAL sex, and unwanted, forced sexual assault. I reckon we should also remember that if someone choose to use the courts and the courts, that's their choice and we need to respect that. At the Belladonna Fest workshop, there was a worker from a women's sexual assault service and she wanted to remind people that even if you don't want to use the courts and the cops for prosecution, there are sometimes benefits to reporting assault, because there is the possibility of accessing high-level counseling services etc.

Thanks to Clodagh, Dayana, Tamarack & Kylie for taking the time to do this...

Patriarchy is far from dead.

I am definitely of the belief that abuse and disrespect are born out of an environment where certain behavior is not questioned and largely ignored. The misogynistic, spiteful attitudes which are all around us as we grow definitely contribute to this. I hate to look at things in terms of men & women, the same way I hate to look at people in terms of their nationality. These things people cannot avoid.

I prefer to look at everyone individually. However when certain privileges are extended to one set of people and not another it that has to be acknowledged. I think as men we need to continually question ourselves and each other. We need to question our actions and view them as being extended a male-privilege we may never have noticed. We have come of age in a sickening, twisted world, where powerful men have gouged out their fortunes on the backs of others. Along the way they have used their power to subjugate women, to abuse, to cripple. They have created a society where women have had to fight tooth and nail to stand on their own, without an all powerful man behind them. It is this world which we have come out of. We have to realise that even our words can be poison. That, while it may have been a minority of rich, vile and greedy men who created modern patriarchy, its repulsive legacy extends to all men. Once we reject it in all its forms, spit it back in the face of these corrupt and vicious bastards who seek to control our sisters, our mothers, our friends, than maybe we stand a chance at destroying this rotten abuse of power and control.

Last Summer, in a squatted house in Dublin, one of the worst abuses ever committed by someone I once called a friend took place. I will not go into detail. There are already zines in print relating addressing this particular incident and others like it and I don't want to drag it up again for those involved sake.

In short, a much loved and respected friend, visiting from another country allowed someone we thought also to be a friend and trusted activist in the community to into her bed to sleep. Over the course of a traumatic and sleepless night, he forced himself upon her. It wasn't until the next day that she really realised that she had been raped.

So much of the safety & security we take for granted in squats, gigs, cafe's, actions etc are based purely on trust. A trust that can so easily be betrayed and manipulated. It is something which threw me into a blind rage which I only took out on a few nearby walls, and saddened me so deeply to see what it had done to such a good friend. Of course only she knows the reality of such an abuse, I can only speak for myself.

While we are striving to create our own autonomous communities where we can leave racism, homophobia and patriarchy behind, as things we will need to retain our fight against only outside of our community, the fact remains that there are those who still retain the sexist "values" and abusive tendencies inherent in that destructive system we are trying to escape. If we can be aware of these dangers and spot signs of threatening or abusive behavior through peoples words and actions before they act upon them, that would be a step closer to preventing it in the first place.

Its hard to speak of these issues rationally and calmly with so much human emotion involved. Many people wanted to kick the fucking shit out of that bastard. It was only after another friend from Australia pointed out to me, that I realised more male violence was not a way of resolving the issue. It was very difficult to tear these thoughts from my mind. I felt selfish for spending time thinking about my own anger and disgust towards the situation, instead of concentrating on our friend who had gone through it. I think that by not using violence, in this incidence, there was a window left open to still deal with the problem collectively and attempt to resolve it constructively. That said I still feel blinded by confusion and aggression when thinking about this from time to time.

I remember how we felt when a friend friend of ours was kicked to death on the street. We didnt want to kill who did it.

There was too much violence in the air already.

The main thing that stopped me acting on any thoughts of beating the shit out of the person who raped our friend, is the chance that we can make our communities a safer place if we leave room to discuss these issues, deal with those who have perpetrated such terrible acts face to face and provide support for the surviving women/men, without turning it into a bloody brawl. Something which I feel would polarise a lot of people. Causing division, strife and generally lead to inaction.

However, those of us who are trying to unlearn these sexist, male-dominant behaviors which we have been force fed half our lives, still need to continually question ourselves.

Even in simple situations like "activist" meetings or discussions I cannot escape the fact that everything I do and say is from a perspective of male-privelege. I have been afforded more chances to speak, more trust in many situations throughout my life in school, in jobs etc, I most likely have not been subjected to the amount of sexually predatory behavior most women have. I am treated differently. I'm only realising in the last few years that inequalities exist in situations I had previously assumed to be free of the gender inequalities created by the system on the other side of the wall.

In relation to single sex organised events, spaces, meetings etc. I think events such as LadyFest, women's groups etc are really important. It is a sad fact that sometimes people can only feel comfortable or safe in and amongst their own gender. Hundreds of years of Patriarchy has left men and women severed, and distrustful of one another.

I understand that to escape male dominated events and a male dominated world in general, some women have taken it upon themselves to organise totally separate from any men to form women's bloc's in protests and events like LadyFest. While I definitely see these as important, I think that as punx we are constantly trying to cut ourselves away from this oppressive system and create alternatives to it. I think we need to organise together as much as possible. How else are we to destroy the boundaries between the sexes if we do not learn to work together? I would like to think we are somewhat outside of the confines of mainstream thinking, where women and men are bound by the preformatted bullshit traditional roles created hundreds of years ago.. I would LIKE to think we are neither women nor men, just PUNK.

Assuming that most of us have an inherent distrust of systemised healthcare, clinics and government initiatives it seems we need then, to start creating our own alternative resources, building support networks for survivors of rape and other trauma's and finding ways of dealing with those accused of such abuses.

An example of the neglect and sheer ignorance towards these issues in Dublin was the response given to a friend seeking advice after surviving a rape.

A counsellor in the Rape Crisis Centre told her that if she was not pregnant then the most of her worries were over, offering no other advice or support. In a City centre hospital she was told that if she wanted to be tested for std's and have an examination after a rape/ assault it was mandatory that she first report it to the police and then go on a month long waiting list. If nothing else this illustrates the ignorant and callous attitude towards these extremely important issues in this country. The fact that such a traumatic and personal experience has to be shared with the fucking pigs in order to be treated is ridiculous. Apart from many peoples hatred and mistrust of the police being forced to report such a crime could put the surviving person in severe danger. The perpetrator could be a family member, a drug dealer, a fucking cop... So the alternative is not to get tested, not to seek counselling, not to see a doctor or any external help at all. At a community meeting (I say community more referring to the anarchist punk "community") called to deal with one such situation we came up with about 5-6 ways of attempting to deal with this among ourselves.

Obviously there can be no absolute resolution after a rape/sexual assault has occurred. The damage has been done. The ultimate betrayal, a sad and sickening invasion on a person. However we can attempt to move on and continue to work as a community, a collective or a functioning group of friends without ignoring the problem or resorting to telling the police and the criminal justice system.

Some of the solutions which were decided upon at the meeting included, the idea to,

* Start a WOMENS GROUP: to meet regularly and discuss the issues * to provide support for those who may have undergone sexual abuse or other problems.
* to provide a space where women felt safe to talk of their own experiences and concerns

a MENS GROUP: A resource for men who have experienced sexual abuse * A space to discuss these issues and start figuring out what we can do to unlearn the sexist patterns of behavior we have been taught to uphold in mainstream society.

Set up JOINED GROUPS: where men and women can discuss these issues together and offer solutions.

To create SAFE SPACES: in houses/squats where people know they can go if they have undergone any trauma especially in their own homes, and feel they have nowhere they can go and feel secure.

To start COMPILING RESOURCES: collect zines, books, films etc. for people to use and inform themselves.

To create a website focussed on providing support and information for those who have undergone forms of sexual abuse or need information on the subject.

Also to PUBLISH A ZINE dealing with these issues and distribute it widely.

This was a really difficult process for us, and something many of us had no experience in.
In a country which is recovering from its religious tumour, there is an air of secrecy and even dismissal toward issues of sexism, rape and physical abuse. Problems, which I feel are all interlinked. These are issues which affect both men and women

One way I feel we can hope to combat them and help those who have undergone such terrible harm is by providing support for one another & continually trying to destroy the bullshit gender constraints which threaten to smother us all..

I havent been reading as many zines as I used to, but thank you to everyone who sent stuff for review. Because of moving houses and other stuff some zines may have got lost or never recieved so i'm sorry if i left ya out...e.

WARNING*1
Crustasfuckexistence as usual from Frank! Great layout, A4 this time, lots of white on black images of punx and war.
This is a lot more music related than other zines by Frank.
Interviews with Blood Spit Nights, Wretched, Kontatto and the manager of Discharge during the Grave New World tour which was fuckn depressing. The other interviews are great with good pics of the bands. Theres a good piece about the deception and corruption of the media and the state in relation to the war in iraq, and more.
PO BOX 40113, Portland-City, OR 97240-0113, USA

LUCIDITY*4

Another big zine from edzer. These zines have been growing on me lately..like a fungus..a happy fungus, a sad fungus..but definitely an engaging fungus..ok,
no more metaphores for me! Luxxx

Lucidity has personal pieces on murder in a small village, medication, and being inspired by the fight against fascism through football(escape to victory, dynamo kiev etc) theres an extensive piece on the history of torture, rants against the dogma of the catholic church and lots more.
The writing is complex and potent, it sometimes seems every word has been carefully placed.ed is a zine machine, but unlike a robot everything he writes seems to flow organically, provoking thought and reflection.. there go those fuckn metaphores again..get this.

Ed Hannen, Downings Cross, Prosperous, Naas, Co. Kildare, Eire.

MISHAP*18

Yet another brill issue from Ryan Mishap.
Great writing as usual. Stuff on the U.S elections and the importance of community based struggle.
stuff about realising inequalities that exist even in small scale examples like the workplace, a piece about Christianity being the subconscious justification for a society based around genocide, stuff about the commodification of skateboarding and more observations on daily life, all containing subtle relevance to a belief that community based action, resistance and cooperation are just as relevant as a drive towards spontaneous revolution.
PO BOX 5841, Eugene, OR 97405, USA
mishapzine@yahoo.com

ATTITUDE PROBLEM*34

This is a great zine. In depth interviews with Uro, Pilger, Severed Head of State, and Born Dead, all with truly interesting, thought provoking questions, written pieces on the fur trade, zine/record reviews, recipes and more. The layout is hand written, cut n paste, in a really clear and readable way, adding to the obviously heart-felt and passionate way Steve approaches zine writing.

Filled with emotion, anger and honesty. This has to be one of my favorite zines...

P.O Box 326, Leeds, LS7 3YR, ENGLAND veganwarrior@yahoo.com

LOSERDOM *12

Another jammers issue from this long running Irish zine. great illustrations as usual with many uncannily familiar faces this time! theres stuff about MayDay in Dublin '04, a piece about West Papua, cycle stories, well written pieces about anti war actions in shannon, and an exploration essay on subculture, mainly punk with some good interviews with local punx..(who jibbed at me and cormy for havin studs n patches ha!) Theres also a great cycle comic featuring many well known scutherbuckets from about town..good stuff.

Anto, 17 new Cabra Road, Phibsboro, Dublin 7, Ireland

THE STRANGE & FABULOUS LIFE OF A DUBLIN SHITPIECE

This zine is a breath of fresh air..well a breath of odd, dirty air, which surprisingly left me gasping for more! If you need a break from the 'usual' in the form of a zine that celebrates the quirky experiences of city life, get this. Whimsical anecdotes of haunted punk houses, junkie street fights, weird coincidences and lots more...

The illustration is nothing short of amazing. Each page is meticulously decorated with detailed shapes & blobs, which make up contorted faces, mangled bodies, entities and extremities of every form. These pictures are both disturbing and hilarious. I actually laughed out loud at some & said 'oughh!!!' o ut loud too! a perfect accompaniment to the engaging writing style.

hearse@yahoo.co.uk
40, MOUNTJOY STREET, DUBLIN 7, IRELAND

DARKSPHERE PROJECT: ELEMENTS

A deeply personal and refreshingly honest and open zine from Dublin. The cover is really nice, using trace paper and card and you can see it took time. Theres stuff here about the Magpie Squat in Dublin, which was both painful and heartwarming to read, pieces about death, depression and the human condition, which were also gut wrenching, but not hopeless. Theres also a piece on the G8 "world order" and some small poems. Amazingxfraxx +more. I hope I see more of these. aracegeneinsane@hotmail.com

WHAT TO DO WHEN?

This zine, as it says on the cover, is about "community response to sexual assault". This was reprinted over here as a response to such ~~is~~ incidences in our own scene, and I feel it is definitely a valuable resource. There's an extensive piece about the three rape cases that occurred at Pointless Fest in Phillie and ways which the people there tried to deal with them, a piece about an individual who sexually assaulted 3 women and the demands made by them for him to hold himself accountable, lots more guidelines on how a community can try to deal with those who perpetrate this behavior without depending on the justice system and also ways of supporting the survivors of such actions. This zine is really in depth and thorough and I feel I can't do it justice in a brief review.

I can't stress enough how important things like this are. sophiesucks@hotmail.com (Australia) - sparkie_303@yahoo.com (Europe)

HERE'S TO ADVENTURE, JUST FOR THE HELL OF IT/ ANYWHERE BUT HERE, NOWHERE FAST .split-zine

This is a ginormous split travel zine from Kylie & Sophie in Australia. Kylie's side is packed with really well written tales and rants that range from the tragic to the downright heartwarming. While I generally don't enjoy entirely personal zines, Kylie breaks the mold and makes this zine really accessible.

Many of her experiences are definitely stuff your average punk can relate to, she just managed to celebrate them, destroy them and just generally turn random experiences into an engaging flow of words. Theres stuff about alienation in cities, chaotic punk festivals, stories from her move here to Dublin (towards the baddies) and love (towards the goodies). Lots of great photos too.. A mix of inspiring, political actions, filthy drunken tales and the travels of Aussie punx invading Europe..great and loads more. The story of the "Winter Hitch", made me feel like I was frost bitten on the side of a miserable Irish road in seconds..A great zine to read while travelling especially.

sophiesucks@hotmail.com

MORGENMUFFEL: *12

Really nicely illustrated zine from Brighton. Its pretty much all cartoons with stuff ranging from Isy's fear of heights, a tale of a W. Papua refugee in the UK, stuff about their social centre the cowly club (which we visited, 'tis great!) drunken stories and sick stories and more. Its great that in the same comic theres a strip about yeast infections and another about fighting cops! great! PO BOX 74, Brighton, BN1 4ZQ, England.

THE GOBLIN

This zine was just what i needed. Refreshing and original, the Goblin is a perfectly laid out & illustrated collection of thoughts and words including pieces about the plastification and getrification of Oakland, a short history of the controversial artist George Grosz & his work during Nazi Germany, and a piece about the sheer joy of being a 'rustic' cider drinker + the drinks origins & history. Theres also stuff about Sean's attempts to bring CHAOS DAYS to the U.S, reviews on everything from pigeons to the evil fungus quern to Emperor..at last reviews i actually enjoyed! Theres loads more and I have to say again the art is amazing. Lots of crusty little punk urchins scampering about woods and other archaic looking landscapes..a perfect mix of bulletbelts & toadstools..inxxit brilliant.

www.goblinko.com

FURIA*4

Great crusty cut n paste zine, written by a Brazilian living in Finland. Lots of great photos of spiky punx, a London scene report, record reviews, a good interview with INEPSY, tales of gigs and drunkenness and gigs in Finland and some more personal stuff.

c/o Diana Takehana, Matsankentie

Metsämiehentie 6,33340,Tampere, FINLAND

xaropeira@hotmail.com

BITE THE HAND THAT FEEDS THE POISONED FOOD*2

Wierd that on the other side of this zine is this zine! but I'm fuckn reviewing it cuz its deadly! Another monster issue from Cormy. Theres an interview with squatters from the Magpie House in Dublin, a Copenhagen scene report, a great interview with the Bagda, with really interesting questions, an interview with the ever hard working and Active punk in the Irish scene, Conor, and an interview with Die Krautzen, which was a great idea and really informative.

Cormy writes the things many of us have trouble saying, in an honest, thought provoking way. The piece about "why I hate cops" made me seethe, but was great to read so many of the emotions i feel towards the pigs on paper. Theres also some great, fucked up travel stories from all over europe east and west, with a fine dollop of chaos, record/zine reviews, and a piece about a fight in Dublin outside a gig which raised a lot of concerning questions about punx fighting back. There is also a piece about fuking 'punk fashion' vs the idea that 'looking punk' ie studs, patches, blah blah can help to strengthen this community, or at least make you feel more comfortable in yourself, help other punx to recognise ya etc, feel protected from the bastards on the street etc.. ok i've gone on enough, great layout, great content, my favorite Irish punk zine.

PO BOX604,2200 Kopenhagen, DENMARK
razethestray@hotmail.com

On the weeks coming up to the 31st of October kids in Dubbin City set fire to huge bonfires, some the height of a house on any scrap of open grass or wasteland in their own corners of the city. For weeks beforehand wood and anything else flammable is collected and rapped from building sites all the ways, and other kids stash piles. Fireworks of any kind are completely illegal in Ireland but in the town centres street sellers peddle smuggled bangs, rockets, redcets and screamer to anyone who wants to blow something up.

For one night the Police are afraid. The city lights up, and fires blaze in every direction, kids run riot & none can really stop them.

Dublin's city centre is a dark and congested place, shops, flats & houses thrown together in a mangled collection of businesses and homes. The suburbs are endless, idemtical houses giving way every few miles to monolithic shopping centres, patches of wasteland, car-parks and strips of motorway gouged between the housing estates.

There are few places for children to actually go, if they do find somewhere they are generally told to get out and stay out.

Looking back on it, Halloween was definitely a night of lawlessness, when the streets transform into a chaotic playground, instead of the dull forbidding swathes of tame they usually are.

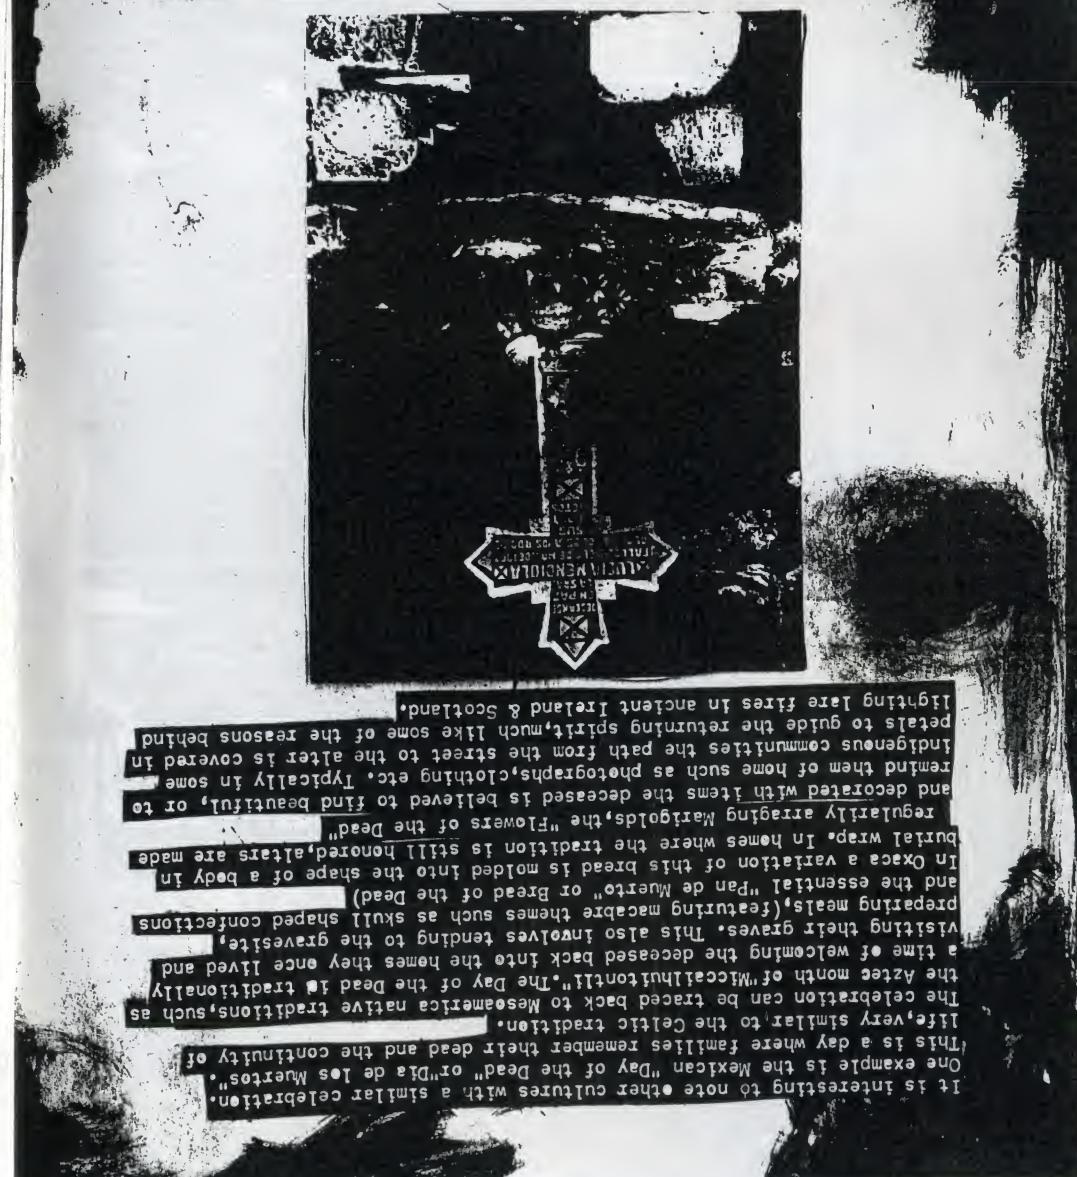

Halloween gives kids an opportunity to take back the night for themselves, a night where societal norms are uprooted, a night of lawlessness, when running around fistfights to the explosions round the huge concrete stands.

It is one day in the year where the young literally take back the very commercialised, Americanised, bought & sold round Ireland. It has been every year on the streets of Dublin and all round Ireland. It has been currents that like beneath a semi-natural order world, its still rekindled and this macabre celebration of the dead, of an underworld and the chaotic have not managed to tame the true nature of Halloween, Samhain.

It is one day in the year where young literally take back the very commercialised, bought & sold 1000 times, but still in they cities which bear down upon them in all their filthiness, every other day.

It is interesting to note other cultures with a similar celebration. One example is the Mexican "Day of the Dead" or "Día de los Muertos". This is a day where families remember their dead and the continuity of life, every similar to the Celtic tradition.

The celebration can be traced back to the Day of the Dead is traditionally a time of welcoming the dead back into the homes they once lived and visiting their graves. This also involves tending to the gravesite, preparing meals, (featuring macabre themes such as skull shaped confections and the essential "Pan de Muerto" or Bread of the Dead) and the decoration of homes where this bread is believed to find beautiful, or to remind them of home such as photographs, clotheting etc. Typically in some and decorative items the deceased is dressed to find beautiful, or to indulgeous communities the path from the street to the altar is covered in petals to guide the returning spirit, much like some of the seasons behind.

Lighting large fires in ancient Ireland & Scotland.

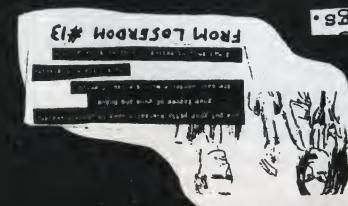

This is a one-off (with the possible exception of a follow-up) project, described as "A.D.I.Y. Zinc detailing with issues of a depression", anxiety, suicidality & mental health". It's a collection of pieces by different people, compiled and laid out by Eric. There's about 15 different pieces by 10 or so people, all approaching the topic from different angles and accumulated by with various dark and not-so-dark imagery. There's poetry and prose pieces of a negative slant, ideas and tactics for overcoming depression, personal descriptions of experiences and struggles and collapses of words & I liked, others I didn't, but all of them served to give me insight into other people's struggles with hopelessness and mental strife which are so seldom talked about. A valuable resource.

Anto, 17 New Cabra Road, Phibsboro, Dublin 7, Eire. is a Good DIY zinc-plate, boss!

Looseleaf No. 12. A5, 44 pages.

tion first try of 10 short stories about Turlogue's life, tiny friends, thoughts and travels, some of which are really touching, just like 1798 rebellion described in the Irishman, who at the time of the rebellion worked his da's mill. The mill was down in the Kenmedy spot. Kenmedy was a woman United Brethren member, who one day let a boy named James Kenmedy start gunpowder in the mill. Later Kenmedy beat him out to the top of the mill, just go back farther again. In 1022 the Wickings rowed their huge, scary-as-fuck longboats onto the beach between grey stones and kilcoole, probably where we used to sprawl in the old lindens—it's this that makes this Breast. There's another historical place written by Stephen who plays in a band with Turlogue about a far too "rose-tinted" case study on "what happened to Summers?" lots of other funny pieces inclded, just like the Kenmedy story of being a tenebrous, great zine, check it out for sure.

which is a good solid zinc, crusty anarcho type stuff. Short but still long enough to be a proper read. Rare in that it's a small zine all done and computer and doesn't look shabby! Sean's got the skills to do this as all on computer and still make it look good. A relaxed informal interview with Discharge and other short interviews in, gurkha, Baspa Meesa, Langdon Beck and Extra incision of ManKind. My avouette part was definitely the piece on hitch-hiking - Good stories written. Also short pieces on the infamous Vietnam War General searcher that guy Aldred and a page about censorship. All Good stuff, only thing I'd like to see changed is some more descriptions in the reviews & some more personal/challenging questions in the x ne reviews. Protostzine(a)@yahoo.com, http://protostzine.cjb.net

This is one of the best zines I've gotten in ages, really exciting and features some of the best art of writers, opinions and stories I'll illustrate in comic form about my life. It's about 50/50 drawings & writings, really well-balanced, on one side talks about things like the DSEI weapons fair protesters in London, her anarchistic persona on the other side things like Isy's involvement in the autonomous cowley club (socal centre) in Brighton, her crap jobs, drunkenness and political correctness, book reviews, etc. The thing is that the personal and political constantly interacted in a really informal & disarmingly manner and really drew you in. There's a lot more in here than in most zines of the same size. I just recently got the anthology of No. 2-II and it's totally great too.

I don't know about you, but when I hear someone say something like "Yeah, it's totally gay" when describing a movie or record, I feel like it's funny, that someone would use that to mean something. I just tried to ignore it, but I still felt kind of uncomfortable and uncomportable and didn't like towards women. I noticed that after a while Dayana seemed not to do it so often, with others too, it just made me feel really crap. Then when I moved to Goshen, it was someone I felt as in my face, since the punx here are general a lot closer and harder to make me feel really physical. Like just random signs of affection when ever you're feeling shifty and down. So each other in between here and the way people are towards each other in the contrast is really noticeable. I just can't emphasize enough how nice it is, it really gives me this really warm feeling and helps a lot whenever you're feeling shifty and down. So I totally fuckin curse myself for being so weird and up tight about it sometimes. So weird, I still feel all doubtful and weird about it. I'll make someone uncomfortable and embarrass myself. But fuck it, the longer I'm here the easier I find it, it's a lot easier with boys that it, it's most often dominated by others, etc, often quite forcefully. Another aspect of this is with humor. Irish people in particular are more interested in Kyrie's zinc, personal liberty interpretation front, about sexism. Interactions, it's most often dominated by males, with louder voices, interactions, it's step back and observe most discussions and observations, etc. You take a sense of humor that basically takes the piss out of everything. Irish punx, presumably from an unconsciousness that has a positive effect in that "nothing is sacred", in other words it goes too far.

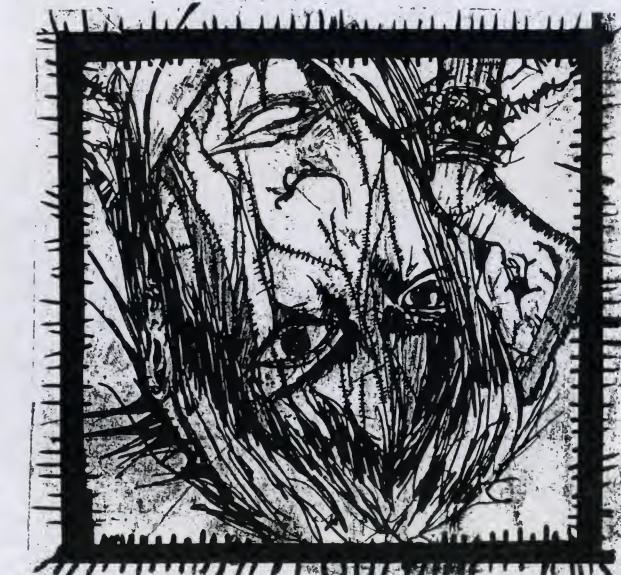

What other people don't realize, with the possibility exception of many Australian punks I've met (who seem to share a similar sense of humor), is that the humor is really. Complicated. Of course, it's often quite loud voices, with other people's perspective that holding such a racist/homophobic perspective that they think it's shifty. The way that a "norm" might describe something as "gay" and that's where the humor comes from e.g. mean those things, hillarious that anyone could say e.g. stupid, that it's stupid/racist/homophobic joke, it's often from the opinion of, absolutely everyone. So, it's someone mixed with taking the piss out of, absolutely everyone. I think that's so stupid, that it's hillarious that anyone could say e.g. mean those things, and that's where the humor comes from e.g. stupid, that it's stupid/racist/homophobic joke, it's often from the perspective that they think it's shifty.

Also I think from my own growing awareness of a disensus with how people act inappropriately towards women: I just tried to ignore it, but I still felt kind of uncomfortable and uncomportable and didn't like towards women. I noticed that after a while Dayana seemed not to do it so often, with others too, it just made me feel really crap. Then when I moved to Goshen, it was someone I felt as in my face, since the punx here are general a lot closer and harder to make me feel really physical. Like just random signs of affection when ever you're feeling shifty and down. So each other in the contrast is really noticeable. I just can't emphasize enough how nice it is, it really gives me this really warm feeling and helps a lot whenever you're feeling shifty and down. So I totally fuckin curse myself for being so weird and up tight about it sometimes. So weird, I still feel all doubtful and weird about it. I'll make someone uncomfortable and embarrass myself. But fuck it, the longer I'm here the easier I find it, it's a lot easier with boys that it, it's most often dominated by others, etc. You take a sense of humor that basically takes the piss out of everything. Irish punx, presumably from an unconsciousness that has a positive effect in that "nothing is sacred", in other words it goes too far.

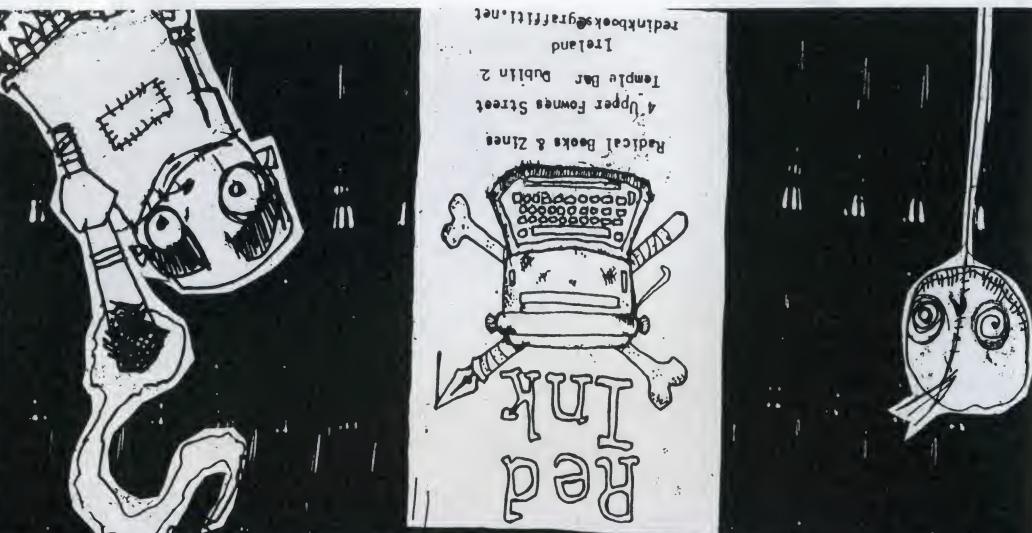

What other people don't realize, with the possibility exception of many Australian punks I've met (who seem to share a similar sense of humor), is that the humor is really. Complicated. Of course, it's often quite loud voices, with other people's perspective that they think it's shifty. The way that a "norm" might describe something as "gay" and that's where the humor comes from e.g. mean those things, and that's where the humor comes from e.g. stupid, that it's stupid/racist/homophobic joke, it's often from the perspective that they think it's shifty.

Also I think from my own growing awareness of a disensus with how people act inappropriately towards women: I just tried to ignore it, but I still felt kind of uncomfortable and uncomportable and didn't like towards women. I noticed that after a while Dayana seemed not to do it so often, with others too, it just made me feel really crap. Then when I moved to Goshen, it was someone I felt as in my face, since the punx here are general a lot closer and harder to make me feel really physical. Like just random signs of affection when ever you're feeling shifty and down. So each other in the contrast is really noticeable. I just can't emphasize enough how nice it is, it really gives me this really warm feeling and helps a lot whenever you're feeling shifty and down. So I totally fuckin curse myself for being so weird and up tight about it sometimes. So weird, I still feel all doubtful and weird about it. I'll make someone uncomfortable and embarrass myself. But fuck it, the longer I'm here the easier I find it, it's a lot easier with boys that it, it's most often dominated by others, etc. You take a sense of humor that basically takes the piss out of everything. Irish punx, presumably from an unconsciousness that has a positive effect in that "nothing is sacred", in other words it goes too far.

A black and white ink drawing of a brick building. The building has a large, arched window on the left side and a smaller, rectangular window on the right side. The brickwork is rough and textured, with visible cracks and some debris or rubble on the ground in front. The artist's signature 'J. H. COOPER' is in the bottom right corner of the drawing.

Heh! Fuckin' cruciat spazzed-out punk-rock angrb from 4 snotty wee basstards. Fast, noisy and orginal soundin', there's 6 songs on this with lyrics on stupid shitty lives, weekend-punks, contestants and the pressures of society in general. Frontic over-the-top vocals and the really cool guitar bits, this is just totally punk soundin'. I think there's gonna be a "out soon on KICK, N, PUNCH - Good sh!t".
KICK, N, PUNCH RECORDS. address elsewhere.

556-0015, JAPAN.
PERSONAL strength, sort of eccentric-punk style mixed with reverb. Lyrics about soundstage, sort of eccentric-punk style mixed with reverb. Fucksin' ameyazin'! GUSST MARXX, I+28-3A. SHIKITSU+NISHI 2, NANJIMA-KU. OSAKA CITY

2

A black and white illustration of a punk band performing on stage. The band consists of four members: a lead singer with a microphone, a guitarist, a bassist, and a drummer. The lead singer is in the foreground, shouting into a microphone. The other three band members are behind him, playing their instruments. The background is dark and textured, suggesting a stage setting. The overall style is energetic and raw, capturing a live performance.

STATE OF FEAR discography LP
the Wallow in Squallor & State of Fear 7"s (96/95) and the "Type" tables Excellen't, been lookin' forward to this for a while. This compiles WILL Turn" LP (97), 26 tracks in all. Totally pissed off, fist-in-the air U.S. crust punks in all. Heavy Dooom influence a mix'd up with a healthy dose of Discobarge beats & swagge'r, and stewed in ENT & Napalm Death minus the blastbeats (except very occasionally). This is probably my favorite style of crust, and straight ahead and vicious, goes right for the throat, a lot more brutal and ugly than most of the tragedy/From Ashes Rize type going on now with plenty of teeth-crushing head-smashin' guitars, yeah!
tracks concerned with environmental destruction, human idiocy in general, cops, rich fucks, you get the picture. Best stuff for me is the old hardcorepunk you should hear this at least a few times.

UNCLE CHARLES in crust we trust IO".
I got this cos of the hilariouss cover art, a crucified crusty sur-me seems to think its totally dumb, but which I think is deebddy! So anway, the music is actuallly way better than I was expecting.
last ride thrashin crust, 3 different vocalists, 1 really harsh guttural dude, a really pissed-off soundhating girl and another hyper-soundhating guy as well. Most of the songs are mid-paced style, and one and then a few others that are more mid-paced/wolppack style, crustcore embattled, slow song at the end of side I that sounds like Acu-before rippling into some blasting megasmash! Also a mob77 cover. I songs, kickass lyrical topics such as laws & the punk scene, war, Swedes, Nazis, notstalgia. Split release between Uncle 10 and Mel worth checking out if you, re into your raw crust shitz. Some really excellent tracks in the songs and the vocals are really well arranged, not too much going on as I was afraid of with them havin 3 singles. Elements of something like Decrepit in here too.

WORLD BURNS TO DEATH no dawn comes 7 4 Songs of rage in hardcore with a Japanese flavor from these Texas punkers. Really precise & powerful but still dirty and vicious. Kickin screamin', guitars and snarling pissed off ~~extra~~ vocals spittin' out billions of lyrics against the volume & hate of the human race. Each of the 4 songs are either the explicitly or cryptically concerned with nazi holocausts and warcrimes. One half of the packaging is sk taken up with a short essay about a particular atrocitry per-1945, which is pretty affecting and sobering. A friend was recently telling me how it pisses him off when these experiments with punk song lyrics and stuff like this in records but I have to disagree, I think it's a really good idea including stuff like this. Yeah, this is a really good record.

HARDCORE HOLLOWCAST, PO BOX 26742, RICHMOND, VA 23261, USA

5 ECDRDS

These cities asphyxiate. They crawl through everything. Separated, it seems, only by motorways and petrol fields.

They are choking us all slowly. Why are we so spite-filled?

No, individuals feel such resent to those they have never met?

Crammed into this heaving mass of identical houses, petrol stations, wood, playing football and baking frozen pizzas!

from a 3 week eviction of our squat. Now they were sitting outside cheappling the last time I had seen them, they were worn out, tired and depressed. Before he got me. Seeing my friends at the conductor and jumping off just watching the sea cliffs go by, pedalling. Just hopping on my daily battling through Dublin traffic on my bike. Just hopping on there, only a short journey of about two hours, had been such a change from the city flooded out of me in a matter of minutes. Getting the train apart. It was an amazing place we were staying. Little had been my head.

I realised what an effect the city had been having on me, rippling my head. After getting back from a short trip to the country with some good friends

I feel totally isolated as everything rushes past me at frantic speed. Now that all this horror has been unveiled, I can't escape it.

Saying the same words over and over again like some shit broken toy.

Chimney stacks, smog, that fucking neon light...

To escape the confines of the everyday, drudgery of urban life. To find a place you can scream so loud those black walls are around you shatter, and you can look at the world a different perspective, an angle that seemed impossible before.

Unavoidable negativity. Everythng seems futile. Locked within these walls we have built, sometimes all it takes is the motivation to crawl away.

we have built, every inch of me cramps with setting seems complicated and demanted souls. Then my mind is not being able to scream, exploring.

I think I inherited from my Dad is to pass a slip without rumaging in it to find something useful. There is so much waste all around us. From the food we skip, to the wood and other materials we find, to abandoned buildings. Its all there for the taking.

Once across Westlands in the city my mind splits in half.

One side of me sees, decay, filth, the remains of an industrial collapse.

It invokes nightmare images of rotting chimneys, belching gasses, people screaming through the debts, horrors unimaginable, urban gasses, and dementia.

Wheneve I come across Westlands in the city my mind splits in half.

It invokes images of me sees, decay, filth, the remains of an industrial collapse.

Once across Westlands in the city my mind splits in half.

I had arrived in tatters. Gut up and battered by the city and in two days I was ready to flee all its bitterness again. In the perpetual grey of the city, everything seems complicated tense & frustrating. Every inch of me cramps with setting seems complicated and in two days I was ready to flee all its bitterness

and in two days I was ready to flee all its bitterness

Wheneve I come across Westlands in the city my mind splits in half.

I had arrived in tatters. Gut up and battered by the city and in two days I was ready to flee all its bitterness

I had arrived in tatters. Gut up and battered by the city and in two days I was ready to flee all its bitterness

I had arrived in tatters. Gut up and battered by the city

I had arrived in tatters. Gut up and battered by the city but liberating to see friends from the city enjoying something so simple and opposite, pure... and a good few miles of hanging out at high speeds cheered us up ne end.

I had arrived in tatters. Gut up and battered by the city

I had arrived in tatters. Gut up and battered by the city

I had arrived in tatters. Gut up and battered by the city

I had arrived in tatters. Gut up and battered by the city

I had arrived in tatters. Gut up and battered by the city in the wet leaves and sliding through a different person. It was like a different spring mark, I felt like in the wet leaves and sliding through a different person. It was strange but liberating to see friends from the city enjoying something so simple and opposite, pure... and a good few miles of hanging out at high speeds cheered us up ne end.

I had arrived in tatters. Gut up and battered by the city

I had arrived in tatters. Gut up and battered by the city

I had arrived in tatters. Gut up and battered by the city

I had arrived in tatters. Gut up and battered by the city

I had arrived in tatters. Gut up and battered by the city in the middle of the night and evicting our house. After a weekend of walking around the huge wooded valley near the house, swimming

I had arrived in tatters. Gut up and battered by the city

I had arrived in tatters. Gut up and battered by the city

I had arrived in tatters. Gut up and battered by the city

I had arrived in tatters. Gut up and battered by the city

I had arrived in tatters. Gut up and battered by the city in the middle of the night and evicting our house. After a weekend of walking around the huge wooded valley near the house, swimming

I had arrived in tatters. Gut up and battered by the city

I had arrived in tatters. Gut up and battered by the city

I had arrived in tatters. Gut up and battered by the city

I had arrived in tatters. Gut up and battered by the city

I had arrived in tatters. Gut up and battered by the city in the middle of the night and evicting our house. After a weekend of walking around the huge wooded valley near the house, swimming

I had arrived in tatters. Gut up and battered by the city

I had arrived in tatters. Gut up and battered by the city

I had arrived in tatters. Gut up and battered by the city

I had arrived in tatters. Gut up and battered by the city

I had arrived in tatters. Gut up and battered by the city in the middle of the night and evicting our house. After a weekend of walking around the huge wooded valley near the house, swimming

I had arrived in tatters. Gut up and battered by the city

I had arrived in tatters. Gut up and battered by the city

I had arrived in tatters. Gut up and battered by the city

I had arrived in tatters. Gut up and battered by the city

I had arrived in tatters. Gut up and battered by the city

THIS ZINE HAS TAKEN AGES. BUT HERE IT IS. SPENED UP ONTO THE BENCH IN MY ROOM, LEAVING PAPER CUTS IN MY GUTS.

I THINK COMY SUGGESTED DODG A SPILT-ZINE NEARLY OF BITE THE HAND. REALLY INSPIRING AND NO. 2 HAS CLUNG TO THE INNARDS OF MY MIND LIKE STICKY GLUE. COMY HAS BEEN A GOOD FRIEND FOR A NUMBER OF YEARS NOW & SOMEONE I HAVE A LOT OF RESPECT FOR. I KNEW HIS MOVE TO KOPENHAGEN WOULD PROBABLY MEAN A LOT LESS CONTACT BETWEEN US, SO IT WAS GOOD TO WORK ON SOMETHING TOGETHER EVEN IF WE WERE AT DIFFERENT ENDS OF EUROPE.

WE WANTED THE ZINE TO BE A JOINT EFFORT, NOT JUST TWO SEPARATE PIECES JUXTAPOSED WITH ONE ANOTHER SO WE LAID OUT ONE OR TWO OF EACH OTHERS WRITINGS, DID PICTURES AND WROTE ON SOME SIMILAR THEMES.

ITS BEEN A HECTIC YEAR IN DUBLIN SINCE LAST SPRING; SQUATS, SQUAT EVICTIONS, TOTAL MANDNESS AROUND MAY DAY, CONFRONTATIONS WITH SOME OF THE 30,000 POLICE ON THE STREETS THAT WEEK, A HAZY WHIRLING SUMMER OF DRUNKEN NIGHTS, WILD ADVENTURES, VISITS FROM FAR FLUNG FRIENDS, ETC. PUNK, FESTIVALS, SPILLING, SHOUTING AND WISHING. WISHING NOVEMBER, DECEMBER, JANUARY & FEBRUARY WOULD JUST DIE.

THE LAST FEW MONTHS THREATENED TO DRAG ME UNDER, LOTS OF DESPAIR. BUT THANK TO MY AMAZING PARTNER IN CRIME, A GOOD FRIENDS WE DRAGGED OURSELVES THROUGH THE SEASONAL ANYWAY THE WINTER IS GRULING. ITS DEATH RATTLE, PEOPLE ARE CLAMBERING BACK UP ONTO THE STREETS AND I FEEL LIKE I CAN YELL AGAIN WITHOUT GETTING A MOUTHFUL OF PETROL FLAVOURED RAIN.

SO HERES SOME SCRIBBLINGS FROM A DUBLIN SUMM PUNK.

A COPENHAGEN CONTAINER CRUST.

ON THOSE WHO Sought TO RULE IT...
DESPERATE DEATH WILL TAKE ITS VENGEANCE

AND IN THESE FINAL DAYS OF

CONVENIENCE OF A FAILED

AS WE FORSAKE OUR PLANET TO THE

(A)

(E)

BITE THE HAND THAT FEEDS THE POISONED FOOD

DISTORT DUBLIN // K-TOWN

CIVILISATION SO SHALL WE FAIL FORSAKEN